Theſe ſwell their proſpects, and exalt their pride,
When offers are diſdain'd, and love deny'd. Pope.

2. Firſt advance.

Force compels this offer,
And it proceeds from policy, not love.—
—Mowbray, you overween to take it ſo:
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear. Shak.

What wouldſt beg, Laertes,
That ſhall not be my offer, not thy aſking? Shake.

3. Propoſal made.

Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.

I enjoined all the ladies to tell the company, in caſe they had been in the ſiege, and had the ſame offer made them as the good women of that place, what every one of them would have brought off with her, and have thought moſt worth the ſaving. Addiſon's Spectator.

It carries too great an imputation of ignorance, or folly, to quit and renounce former tenets upon the offer of an argument which cannot immediately be anſwered. Locke.

The Arians, Eunomians and Macedonians, were then formally and ſolemnly challenged by the Catholicks, to refer the matter in diſpute to the concurring judgment of the writers that lived before the the controverſy began; but they declined the offer. Waterland.

4. Price bid; act of bidding a price.

When ſtock is high, they come between,
Making by ſecond hand their offers;
Then cunningly retire unſeen,
With each a million in his coffers. Swift.

5. Attempt; endeavour.

Many motions, though they be unprofitable to expel that which hurteth, yet they are offers of nature, and cauſe motions by conſent; as in groaning, or crying upon pain. Bacon.

It is in the power of every one to make ſome eſſay, ſome offer and attempt, ſo as to ſhew that the heart is not idle or inſenſible, but that it is full and big, and knows itſelf to be ſo, though it wants ſtrength to bring forth. South's Sermons.

One ſees in it a kind of offer at modern architecture, but at the ſame time that the architect has ſhown his diſlike of the Gothick manner, one may ſee that they were not arrived at the knowledge of the true way. Addiſon on Italy.

6. Something given by way of acknowledgment.

Fair ſtreams that do vouchſafe in your clearneſs to repreſent unto me my blubbered face, let the tribute offer of my tears procure your ſtay awhile with me, that I may begin yet at laſt to find ſomething that pities me. Sidney.

From the lewd father to the lewder son. Dryden.

6. At the time immediate.

This hath all its force at once, upon the first impression, and is ever afterwards in a declining state. Atterbury.

7. Formerly; at a former time.

Thereon his arms and once-lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.
My soul had once some foolish fondness for thee,
But hence 'tis gone. Addison.

8. Once seems to be rather a noun than an adverb, when it has at before it, and when it is joined with an adjective: as, this once, that once.

ONE. adj. [an, œne, Sax. een, Dut. ein, Germ. ein, Greek.]

1. Less than two; single; denoted by an unite.

The man he knew was one that willingly,
For one good look would hazard all. Daniel.
Pindarus the poet, and one of the wisest, acknowledged also one God the most high, to be the father and creator of all things. Raleigh.
Love him by parts in all your num'rous race,
And from those parts form one collected grace;
Then when you have refin'd to that degree,
Imagine all in one, and think that one is he. Dryden.

2. Indefinitely: any, some one.

We shall
Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days. Shakespeare.
I took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other. Shakespeare's Tempest.

3. It is added to any.

When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. Matt. xiii. 19.
If any one prince made a felicity in this life, and left fair fame after death, without the love of his subjects, there were some colour to despise it. Suckling.

4. Different: diverse: opposed to another.

What a precious comfort to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes. Shak.
It is one thing to draw outlines true, the features like, the proportions exact, the colouring tolerable, and another thing to make all these graceful. Dryden.
Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile. Burnet.
It is one thing to think right, and another thing to know the right way to lay our thoughts before others with advantage and clearness. Locke.
My legs were closed together by so many wrappers one over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Addison.
There can be no reason why we should prefer any one action to another, but because we have greater hopes of advantage from the one than from the other. Smalridge.
Two bones rubbed hard against one another, or with a file, produce a fetid smell. Arbuthnot.
At one time they keep their patients so warm, as almost to stifle them, and all of a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker on Learning.

5. One of two opposed to the other.

Ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this. Deut. iv. 32.
Both the matter of the stone and marchasite, had been at once fluid bodies, till one of them, probably the marchasite, first growing hard, the other, as being yet of a more yielding consistence, accommodated itself to the harder's figure. Boyle.

6. Not many; the same.

The church is therefore one, though the members may be many; because they all agree in one faith. There is one Lord and one faith, and that truth once delivered to the saints, which whosoever shall receive, embrace, and profess, must necessarily be accounted one in reference to that profession: for if a company of believers become a church by believing, they must also become one church by believing one truth. Pearson.

7. Particularly one.

One day when Phœbe fair,
With all her band was following the chase,
This nymph quite tir'd with heat and scorching air,
Sat down to rest. Spenser.
One day, in turning some uncultur'd ground,
In hopes a free-stone quarry might be found,
His mattock met resistance, and behold,
A casket burst, with diamonds fill'd, and gold. Harte.

8. Some future.

Heav'n waxeth old, and all the spheres above
Shall one day faint, and their swift motion stay;
And time itself, in time shall cease to move,
But the soul survives and lives for aye. Daviet.

ONE. n. s. [There are many uses of the word one, which serve to denominate it a substantive, though some of them may seem rather to make it a pronoun relative, and some may perhaps be considered as consistent with the nature of an adjective, the substantive being understood.]

1. A single person.

If one by one you wedded all the world,
She you kill'd would be unparallel'd. Shakespeare.
Although the beauties, riches, honours, sciences, virtues, and perfections of all men were in the present possession of one, yet somewhat beyond and above all this there would still be sought and earnestly thirsted for. Hooker.
From his lofty steed he flew,
And raising one by one the suppliant crew,
To comfort each. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

If one muſt be rejected, one ſucceed,
Make him my Lord, within whoſe faithful breaſt
Is fix'd my image, and who loves me beſt. Dryden.
When join'd in one, the good, the fair, the great,
Deſcends to view the muſes humble ſeat. Granv.

2. A ſingle maſs or aggregate.

3. The firſt hour.

Till 'tis one o'clock, our dance of cuſtom
Let us not forget. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſ.

4. The ſame thing.

I anſwer'd not again;
But that's all one. Shakeſpeare.
To be in the underſtanding, and not to be underſtood, is all one as to ſay any thing is, and is not in the underſtanding. Locke.

5. A perſon, indefinitely and looſe.

A good acquaintance with method will greatly aſſiſt every one in ranging human affairs. Watts.

6. A perſon, by way of eminence.

Ferdinand
My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one,
The wiſeſt prince that there had reign'd. Shakeſp.

7. A diſtinct or particular perſon.

That man ſhould be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon.
No nations are wholly aliens and ſtrangers the one to the other. Bacon's Holy War.
The obedience of the one to the call of grace, when the other, ſuppoſed to have ſufficient, if not an equal meaſure, obeys not, may reaſonably be imputed to the humble, malleable, melting temper. Hammond.
One or other ſees a little box which was carried away with her, and ſo diſcovers her to her friends. Dryden.

8. Perſons united.

As I have made ye one, lords, one remain:
So I grow ſtronger, you more honour gain. Shak.

9. Concord; agreement; one mind.

The king was well inſtructed how to carry himſelf between Ferdinando and Philip, reſolving to keep them at one within themſelves. Bacon.
He is not at one with himſelf what account to give of it. Tillotſon.

10. [On, l'on, French. It is uſed ſometimes a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any perſon. For one the Engliſh formerly uſed men; as, they live obſcurely, men know not how; or die obſcurely, men mark not when. Aſcham. For which it would now be ſaid, one knows not how, one knows not when; or, it is not known how.] Any perſon; any man indefinitely.

It is not ſo worthy to be brought to heroical effects by fortune or neceſſity, like Ulyſſes and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidn.
One may be little the wiſer for reading this dialogue, ſince it neither ſets forth what Erona is, nor what the cauſe ſhould be which threatens her with death. Sidney.
One would imagine theſe to be the expreſſions of a man bleſſed with eaſe, affluence and power; not of one who had been juſt ſtripped of all thoſe advantages. Atterbury.
For provoking of urine, one ſhould begin with the gentleſt firſt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
For ſome time one was not thought to underſtand Ariſtotle, unleſs he had read him with Averroe's comment. Baker.

11. A perſon of particular character.

Then muſt you ſpeak
Of one that lov'd not wiſely, but too well;
Of one not eaſily jealous; but being wrought
Perplex'd in the extreme. Shakeſpeare's Othello.
With lives and fortunes truſting one
Who ſo diſcreetly us'd his own. Waller.
Edward I. was one who very well knew how to uſe a victory, as well as obtain it. Hale.
One who contemned divine and human laws. Dryden.
Forgive me, if that title I afford
To one, whom Nature meant to be a lord. Harte.

12. One has ſometimes a plural, either when it ſtands for perſons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world: or when it relates to ſome thing going before, and is only the repreſentative of the antecedent noun. This relative mode of ſpeech, whether ſingular or plural, is in my ear not very elegant, yet is uſed by good authors.

Be not found here; hence with your little ones.
Shakeſpeare.
Does the ſon receive a natural life? The ſubject enjoys a civil one: that's but the matter, this the form. Holyday.
Theſe ſucceſſes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than ſuch ruinous ones as are dyed in human blood. Glanville.
He that will overlook the true reaſon of a thing which is but one, may eaſily find many falſe ones, error being infinite. Tillotſon.
The following plain rules and directions, are not the leſs uſeful becauſe they are plain ones. Att.
There are many whoſe waking thoughts are wholly employed on their ſleeping ones. Addiſon.
Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad ſovereign, who might poſſibly have been a good one, had he been inveſted with an authority limited by law. Addiſon's Freeholder.
This evil fortune which attends extraordinary men, hath been imputed to divers cauſes that need not be ſet down, when ſo obvious an one occurs, that when a great genius appears, the dunces are all in conſpiracy againſt him. Swift.

13. One another, is a mode of ſpeech very frequent; as, they love one another; that is, one of them loves another: the ſtorm beats the trees againſt one another; that is, one againſt another.

In democratical governments, war did commonly unite the minds of men; when they had enemies abroad, they did not contend with one another at home. Davenant.

ONE berry. n. ſ. [aconitum, Latin.] Wolf'sbane, or monk'sbane.

O'NEEYED. adj. [one and eye.] Having only one eye.

The ſign-poſt dauber would diſdain to paint
The oneey'd heroe on his elephant. Dryden.
The mighty family
Of oneey'd brothers haſten to the ſhore. Addiſon.

ONEIROCRI'TICAL. adj. [ὀνειροκριτικὸς, Gr. oneirocritique, Fr. it ſhould therefore according to analogy be written onirocritical and onirocritick.] Interpretative of dreams.

If a man has no mind to paſs by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumſtances, he may employ himſelf in that new kind of obſervation which my oneicritical correſpondent has directed him to make. Addiſon's Spectator.

ONEIROCRI'TICK. n. ſ. [ὀνειροκριτικὸς, Gr.] An interpreter of dreams.

Having ſurveyed all ranks and profeſſions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an oneirocritick, or an interpreter of dreams. Addiſon's Spectator.

O'NENESS. n. ſ. [from one.] Unity, the quality of being one.

Our God is one, or rather very oneneſs and mere unity, having nothing but itſelf in itſelf, and not conſiſting, as all things do beſides God, of many things. Hooker.
The oneneſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, referring to the ſeveral hypoſtaſes, is the one eternal indiviſible divine nature, and the eternity of the ſon's generation, and his co-eternity, and his conſubſtantiality with the Father when he came down from Heaven and was incarnate. Hammond.

O'NERARY. adj. [onerarius, Lat. oneraire, Fr.] Fitted for carriage or burthens; compriſing a burthen.

To O'NERATE. v. a. [onero, Lat.] To load; to burthen.

ONERA'TION. n. ſ. [from onerate.] The act of loading. Dict.

O'NEROUS. adj. [onereux, Fr. oneroſus, Latin.] Burthenſome; oppreſſive.

A baniſhed perſon, abſent out of neceſſity, retains all things onerous to himſelf, as a puniſhment for his crime. Ayliffe.

O'NION. n. ſ. [oignon, French; cæpe.] A plant.

If the boy have not a woman's gift
To rain a ſhower of commanded tears
An onion will do well. Shakeſp. Tam. of Sh.
I am aſs, am onion-eyed Shakeſ. Ant. and Cleop.

This is ev'ry cook's opinion,
No ſav'ry diſh without an onion:
But leſt your kiſſing ſhould be ſpoil'd,
Your onions muſt be thoroughly boil'd. Swift.

O'NLY. adj. [from one, onely, or onelike.]

1. Single; one and no more.

Of all whom fortune to my ſword did bring,
This only man was worth the conquering. Dryden.

2. This and no other.

The only child of ſhadeful Savernake. Drayton.
The logick now in uſe has long poſſeſſed the chair, as the only art taught in the ſchools for the direction of the mind in the ſtudy of the ſciences. Locke.

3. This above all other: as, he is the only man for muſick.

1. Simply; ſingly; merely; barely.

I propoſe my thoughts only as conjectures. Burn.
The poſterity of the wicked inherit the fruit of their fathers vices; and that not only by a juſt judgment, but from the natural courſe of things. Tillot.
All who deſerve his love, he makes his own;
And to be lov'd himſelf, needs only to be known.
Dryden.
The practice of virtue is attended not only with preſent quiet and ſatisfaction, but with comfortable hope of a future recompence. Nelſon.
Nor muſt this contrition be exerciſed by us, only for groſſer evils; but when we live the beſt. Wake.

2. So and no otherwiſe.

Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually. Gen. vi. 5.

3. Singly without more: as, only begotten.

O'NOMANCY. n. ſ. [ὄνομα and μαντεία.] Divination by a name.

Deſtinies were ſuperſtitiouſly, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were ſuitable, and fatal neceſſities concurred herein with voluntary motion. Camden.

ONOMA'NTICAL. adj. [ὄνομα and μαντεία.] Predicting by names.

Theodatus, when curious to know the ſucceſs of his wars againſt the Romans, an onomantical or name-wiſard Jew, willed him to ſhut up a number of ſwine and give ſome of them Roman names, others Gothiſh names with ſeveral marks, and there to leave them. Camden.

O'NSET. n. ſ. [on and ſet.]

1. Attack; ſtorm; aſſault; firſt brunt.

As well the ſoldier dieth, which ſtandeth ſtill,
as he that gives the braveſt onſet. Sidney.
All breathleſs, weary, faint,
Him ſpying, with freſh onſet he aſſail'd,
And kindling new his courage, ſeeming queint,
Struck him ſo hugely, that through great conſtraint
He made him ſtoop. Spenſer.
The ſhout
Of battle now began, and ruſhing ſound
Of onſet. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.
Sometimes it gains a point; and preſently it finds itſelf baffled and beaten off; yet ſtill it renews the onſet, attacks the difficulty afreſh; plants this reaſoning and that argument, like ſo many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obſtinate incloſed truth. South.
Without men and proviſions it is impoſſible to ſecure conqueſts that are made in the firſt onſets of an invaſion. Addiſon.
Obſerve
The firſt impetuous onſets of his grief;
Uſe every artifice to keep him ſtedfaſt. Philips.

2. Something added or ſet on by way of ornamental appendage. This ſenſe, ſays Nicholſon, is ſtill retained in Northumberland, where onſet means a tuft.

I will with deeds requite thy gentleneſs;
And for an onſet, Titus, to advance
Thy name and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my empreſs. Shakeſp. Tit. An.

To O'NSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſet upon; to begin. Not uſed.

This for a while was hotly onſetted and a reaſonable price offered, but ſoon couled again. Carew.

O'n-

ONSLAUGHT. n. ſ. [on and ſlay. See SLAUGHTER.] Attack; ſtorm; onſet. Not in uſe.

They made a halt
To view the ground, and where t' aſſault,
Then call'd a council, which was beſt,
By ſiege or onſlaught to inveſt
The enemy; and 'twas agreed
By ſtorm and onſlaught to proceed. Hudibras.

ONTO'LOGIST. n. ſ. [from ontology.] One who conſiders the affections of being in general; a metaphyſician.

ONTO'LOGIST. n. ſ. [ὄντα and λόγος.] The ſcience of the affections of being in general; metaphyſicks.

The modes, accidents and relations that belong to various beings, are copiouſly treated of in metaphyſicks, or more properly ontology. Watts's Logick.

O'NWARD. adv. [onpeapꝺ, Saxon.]

1. Forward; progreſſively.

My lord,
When you went onward on this ended action
I look'd upon her with a ſoldier's eye. Shakeſpeare.

Satan was now at hand, and from his ſeat
The monſter moving onward, came as faſt
With horrid ſtrides. Milt. Par. Loſt.

Him thro' the ſpicy foreſt onward come
Adam diſcern'd, as in the door he ſat
Of his cool bow'r. Milton's Par. Loſt.

Not one looks backward, onward ſtill he goes,
Yet ne'er looks forward farther than his noſe. Pope.

2. In a ſtate of advanced progreſſion.

Philoxenus came to ſee how onward the fruits were of his friend's labour. Sidney.

You are already ſo far onward of your way, that you have forſaken the imitation of ordinary converſe. Dryden.

3. Somewhat farther.

A little onward lend thy guiding hand
To theſe dark ſteps, and a little farther on. Milton.

O'NYCHA. n. ſ. It is found in two different ſenſes in ſcripture.—The odoriferous ſnail or ſhell, and the ſtone onyx. The greateſt part of commentators explain it by the onyx or odoriferous ſhell. The onyx is fiſhed for in the Indies, where grows the ſpicanardi, the food of this fiſh, and what makes its ſhell ſo aromatick. Calmet.

Take ſweet ſpices, onycha, and galbanum. Exod.

O'NYX. n. ſ. [ὄνυξ.] The onyx is a ſemipellucid gem, of which there are ſeveral ſpecies, but the blueiſh white kind, with brown and white zones, is the true onyx legitima of the ancients. Hill.

Nor are her rare endowments to be ſold
For glittering ſand by Ophir ſhown,
The blue-ey'd ſaphir, or rich onyx ſtone. Sandys.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: it is of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluiſh white, and ſometimes of red: when on one or both ſides the white, there happens to lie alſo a plate of a reddiſh or freſh colour, the jewellers call the ſtone a ſardonyx. Woodw.

OOZE. n. ſ. [either from eaux, waters, French; or ꝼæꝛ, wetneſs, Saxon.]

1. Soft mud; mire at the bottom of water; ſlime.

My ſon i' th' ooze is bedded. Shakeſpeare.

Some carried up into their grounds the ooze or ſalt water mud, and found good profit thereby. Carew.

Old father Thames rais'd up his rev'rend head,
Deep in his ooze he ſought his ſedgy bed,
And ſhrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryd.

2. Soft flow; ſpring. This ſeems to be the meaning in Prior.

From his firſt fountain and beginning ooze,
Down to the ſea each brook and torrent flows. Prior.

3. The liquor of a tanner's vat.

To OOZE. v. n. [from the noun.] To flow by ſtealth; to run gently; to drain away.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, ev'n then
A wat'riſh humour ſwell'd and ooz'd agen. Dry.

The lilly drinks
The liſtent ſtill, ſcarce oozing thro' the graſs. Thomſon.

OOZY. adj. [from ooze.] Miry; muddy; ſlimy.

From his oozy bed,

To OPA'CATE. v. a. [opaco, Latin.] To ſhade; to cloud; to darken; to obſcure.

The ſame corpuſcles upon the unſtopping of the glaſs, did opacate that part of the air they moved in. Boyle.

OPA'CITY. n. ſ. [opacité, Fr. opacitas, Latin.] Cloudineſs; want of tranſparency.

Can any thing eſcape eyes in whoſe opticks there is no opacity? Brown.

Had there not been any night, ſhadow, or opacity, we ſhould never have had any determinate conceit of darkneſs. Glanville.

How much any body hath of colour, ſo much hath it of opacity, and by ſo much the more unfit is it to tranſmit the ſpecies. Ray on Creation.

The leaſt parts of almoſt all bodies, are in ſome meaſure tranſparent; and the opacity of thoſe bodies ariſeth from the multitude of reflections cauſed in their internal parts. Newton.

OPA'COUS. adj. [opacus, Latin.] Dark; obſcure; not tranſparent.

When he perceives that opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal diffuſion through the whole place that it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, and more ſubtile far than they, and conſequently diviſible into leſſer atoms; and having leſſer pores, gives leſs ſcope to our eyes to miſs light. Digby.

Upon the firm opacous globe
Of this round world, whoſe firſt convex divides
The luminious inferior orbs, inclos'd
From chaos, and th' inroad of darkneſs old,
Satan alighted. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

OPAL. n. ſ. [opalus, Latin.] The opal is a very elegant and ſingular kind of ſtone, it hardly comes within the rank of the pellucid gems, being much more opake, and leſs hard. It is in the pebble ſhape, from the head of a pin to the bigneſs of a walnut. It is naturally bright, and ſhows all its beauty without the help of the lapidary: in colour it reſembles the fineſt mother of pearl; its baſis ſeems a bluiſh or greyiſh white, but with a property of reflecting all the colours of the rainbow, as turned differently to the light. Hill.

Thy mind is a very opal. Shakeſpeare.

Th' empyreal heav'n, extended wide
In circuit, undetermin'd ſquare or round;
With opal tow'rs, and battlements adorn'd
Of living ſaphir. Milton's Par. Loſt.

We have this ſtone from Germany, and is the ſame with the opal of the ancients. Woodward.

OPA'QUE. adj. [opacus, Latin.] Dark; not tranſparent; cloudy.

They
Shot upward ſtill direct, whence no way round
Shadow from body opaque can fall. Milton.

Theſe diſappearing fixt ſtars were actually extinguiſhed and turned into more opaque and groſs planet-like bodies. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

To OPE. } v. a. [open, Saxon; op, Iſlandick,
To O'PEN. } a hole. Ope is uſed only in poetry, when one ſyllable is more convenient than two.]

1. To uncloſe; to unlock; to put into ſuch a ſtate as that the inner parts may be ſeen or entered: the contrary to ſhut.

The world's mine oyſter,
Which I with ſword will open. Shakeſpeare.

Before you fight, ope this letter. Shakeſpeare.

They conſent to work us harm and woe,
To ope the gates, and ſo let in our foe. Fairfax.

If a man open a pit and not cover it, and an ox fall therein, the owner of the pit ſhall make it good. Exod. xxi. 23

Let us paſs through your land, and none ſhall do you any hurt; howbeit they would not open unto him. 1 Mac. v. 48.

Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cauſe of all ſuch as are appointed to deſtruction. Prov. xxxi.

Adam, now ope thine eyes; and firſt behold
Th' effects which thy original crime hath wrought
In ſome to ſpring from thee. Milton.

The draw-bridges at Amſterdam part in the middle, and a veſſel, though under ſail, may paſs them without the help of any one on ſhore; for the maſt-head, or break-water of the ſhip bearing againſt the bridge in the middle, opens it. Brown.

Our fleet Apollo ſends,
Where Tuſcan Tiber rolls with rapid force,
And where Numicus opes his holy ſource. Dryd.

When firſt you ope your doors, and paſſing by,
The ſad ill-omen'd object meets your eye. Dryd.

My old wounds are open'd at this view,
And in my murd'rer's preſence bleed anew. Dryden.

When the matter is made, the ſide muſt be opened to let it out. Arbuthnot.

2. To ſhow; to diſcover.

The Engliſh did adventure far for to open the north parts of America. Abbot's Deſcr. World.

3. To divide; to break.

The wall of the cathedral church was opened by an earthquake, and ſhut again by a ſecond. Addiſon.

4. To explain to diſcloſe.

Some things wiſdom openeth by the ſacred books of ſcripture, ſome things by the glorious works of nature. Hooker.

Paul reaſoned with them out of the ſcriptures, opening and alledging, that Chriſt muſt needs have ſuffered and riſen again from the dead. Acts.

After the Earl of Lincoln was ſlain, the king opened himſelf to ſome of his council, that he was ſorry for the earl's death, becauſe by him he might have known the bottom of his danger. Bacon.

Gramont, governor of Bayonne, took an exquiſite notice of their perſons and behaviour, and opened himſelf to ſome of his train, that he thought them to be gentlemen of much more worth than their habits bewrayed. Wotton.

A friend who relates his ſucceſs, talks himſelf into a new pleaſure; and by opening his misfortunes, leaves part of them behind him. Collier.

5. To begin; to make the initial exhibition.

You retained him only for the opening of your cauſe, and your main lawyer is yet behind. Dryden.

Homer opens his poem with the utmoſt ſimplicity and modeſty; he continually grows upon the reader. Notes on Odyſſey.

To OPE. } v. n.
To O'PEN. }

1. To uncloſe itſelf; not to remain ſhut; not to continue cloſed.

The hundred doors
Ope of themſelves; a ruſhing whirlwind roars
Within a cave. Dryden.

Unnumber'd treaſures ope at once,
From each ſhe nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddeſs. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

2. To bark. A term of hunting.

If I cry out thus upon no trial, never truſt me when I open again. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſ.

The night reſtores our actions done by day;
As hounds in ſleep will open for their prey. Dryd.

Hark! the dog opens, take thy certain aim;
The woodcock flutters. Gay's Rural Sports.

OPE. } adj. [Ope is ſcarcely uſed but by old
O'PEN. } authors, and by them in the primitive not figurative ſenſe.]

1. Uncloſed; not ſhut.

The gates are ope; now prove good ſeconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them;
Not for the fliers. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

Moſt ſacrilegious murther hath broke ope
The lord's anointed temple, and ſtole thence
The life o' th' building. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

Then ſent Sanballat his ſervant, with an open letter in his hand. Neh. vi. 5.

With the ſame key ſet ope the door
Wherewith you lock'd it faſt before. Chaw.

Thro' the gate,
Wide open and unguarded, Satan paſs'd. Milton.

They meet the chiefs returning from the fight,
And each with open arms embrac'd her choſen knight. Dryden.

He, when Æneas on the plain appears,
Meets him with open arms and falling tears. Dry.
The bounce broke ope the door. Dryden.

To OPI'NE. v. n. [opinor, Latin.] To think; to judge; to be of opinion.

Fear is ague, that forſakes
And haunts by fits thoſe whom it takes;
And they'll opine they feel the pain
And blows they felt to day, again. Hudibras.

In matters of mere ſpeculation, it is not material to the welfare of government, or themſeves, whether they opine right or wrong, and whether they be philoſophers or no. South.

But I, who think more highly of our kind
Opine, that nature, as in duty bound,
Deep hid the ſhining miſchief under ground Po.

OPI'NIATIVE. adj. [from opinion]

1. Stiff in a preconceived notion.

2. Imagined; not proved.

It is difficult to find out truth, becauſe it is in ſuch inconſiderable proportions ſcattered in a maſs of opiniative uncertainties; like the ſilver in Hiero's crown of gold. Glanville.

OPINIA'TOR. n. ſ. [opiniatre, Fr.] One fond of his own notion; inflexible; adherent to his own opinion.

What will not opiniators and ſelf-believing men diſpute of and make doubt of? Raleigh.

Eſſex left lord Roberts governour; a man of a ſour and ſurly nature, a great opiniator, and one who muſt be overcome before he would believe that he could be ſo. Clarendon.

For all his exact plot, down was he caſt from all his greatneſs, and forced to end his days in a mean condition; as it is pity but all ſuch politick opiniators ſhould. South.

OPINIA'TRE. adj. [French.] Obſtinate; ſtubborn.

Inſtead of an able man, you deſire to have him an inſignificant wrangler, opiniatre in diſcourſe, and priding himſelf in contradicting others. Locke.

OPINIA'TRETY. } n. ſ. [opiniatreté, Fr.] Obſti-
OPI'NIATRY. } nacy; inflexibility; determination of mind; ſtubborneſs. This word, though it hath been tried in different forms, is not yet received, nor is it wanted.

Leſt popular opiniatry ſhould ariſe, we will deliver the chief opinions. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The one ſet the thoughts upon wit and falſe colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opiniatry. Locke on Education.

So much as we ourſelves comprehend of truth and reaſon, ſo much we poſſeſs of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, make us not one jot the more knowing, though they happen to be true: what in them was ſcience, is in us but opiniatrety. Locke.

I can paſs by opiniatry, and the buſy meddling of thoſe who thruſt themſelves into every thing. Woodward's Letters.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatrety in leaving me: but he ſhall not get rid ſo. Pope.

OPI'NION. n. ſ. [opinion, Fr. opinio, Lat.]

1. Perſuaſion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, ſettled in the imagination, but never arriving at the underſtanding, there to obtain the tincture of reaſon. Ben Jonſon.

Opinion is, when the aſſent of the underſtanding is ſo far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one perſuaſion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting. Hale.

Time wears out the fictions of opinion, and doth by degrees diſcover and unmaſk that fallacy of ungrounded perſuaſions; but confirms the dictates and ſentiments of nature. Wilkins.

Bleſt be the princes who have fought
For pompous names, or wide dominion,
Since by their error we are taught,
That happineſs is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgment; notion.

Where no ſuch ſettled cuſtom hath made it law, there it hath force only according to the ſtrength of reaſon and circumſtances joined with it, or as it ſhews the opinion and judgment of them that made it; but not at all as if it had any commanding power of obedience. Selden.

Can they make it out againſt the common ſenſe and opinion of all mankind, that there is no ſuch thing as a future ſtate of miſery for ſuch as have lived ill here. South.

Charity itſelf commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendſhip, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend. South.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning heirs, that where there are divers children, the eldeſt ſon has the right to be heir. Locke.

Philoſophers are of opinion, that infinite ſpace is poſſeſſed by God's infinite omnipreſence. Locke.

A ſtory out of Boccalini ſufficiently ſhews us the opinion that judicious author enterta ned of the criticks. Addiſon.

3. Favourable judgment.

In actions of arms ſmall matters are of great moment, eſpecially when they ſerve to raiſe an opinion of commanders. Hayward.

Howſoever I have no opinion of thoſe things; yet ſo much I conceive to be true, that ſtrong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate. Bacon.

If a woman had no opinion of her own perſon and dreſs, ſhe would never be angry at thoſe who are of the opinion with herſelf. Law.

To OPI'NION. v. a. [from the noun.] To opine; to think. A word out of uſe, and unworthy of revival.

The Stoicks opinioned the ſouls of wiſe men dwell about the moon, and thoſe fools wandered about the earth: whereas the Epicureans held nothing after death. Brown.

That the ſoul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimenſion, is generally opinioned. Glanville.

OPI'NIONATIVE. adj. [from opinion.] Fond of preconceived notions; ſtubborn.

Striking at the root of pedantry and opinionative aſſurance, would be no hindrance to the world's improvement. Glanville.

One would rather chuſe a reader, without art, than one ill inſtructed with learning, but opinionative and without judgment. Burnet's Theo. of the E.

OPI'NIONATIVELY. adv. [from opinionative.] Stubbornly.

OPI'NIONATIVENESS. n. ſ. [from opinionative.] Obſtinacy.

OPITULA'TION. n. ſ. [opitulatio, Lat.] An aiding; a helping. Dict.

O'PIUM. n. ſ. A juice, partly of the reſinous, partly of the gummy kind. It is brought to us in flat cakes or maſſes very heavy and of a denſe texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark browniſh yellow; its ſmell is of a dead faint kind; and its taſte very bitter and very acrid. It is brought from Natolia, Egypt, and the Eaſt Indies, produced from the white garden poppy; with which the fields of Aſia-Minor are in many places ſown. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet ſoft, green and full of juice, inciſions are made in them, and from every one of theſe a few drops flow of a milky juice, which ſoon hardens into a ſolid conſiſtence. The fineſt opium proceeds from the firſt inciſions. What we generally have is the mere crude juice, worked up with water, or honey ſufficient to bring it into form. Externally applied it is emollient, relaxing and diſcutient, and greatly promotes ſuppuration. A moderate doſe of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet cuſtom will make people bear a dram, but in that caſe nature is vitiated. Its firſt effect is the making the patient cheerful; it removes melancholy, and diſſipates the dread of danger; the Turks always take it when they go to battle: it afterwards quiets the ſpirits, eaſes pain, and diſpoſes to ſleep. After the effect is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the ſpirits become lower than than before, and the pulſe languid. An immoderate doſe of opium brings on drunkenneſs, cheerfulneſs and loud laughter, at firſt, and, after many terrible ſymptoms, death itſelf. Thoſe who have accuſtomed themſelves to an immoderate uſe of opium are apt to be faint, idle and thoughtleſs; they loſe their appetite, and grow old before their time. Hill.

Sleep hath forſook and giv'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium as my only cure. Milt.

The colour and taſte of opium are, as well as its ſoporific or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke.

O'PLE-TREE. n. ſ. [opulus, ople, and tree.] A ſort of tree. Ainſworth.

OPOBALSAMUM. n. ſ. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPO'PONAX. n. ſ. [Lat.] A gum reſin in ſmall looſe granules, and ſometimes in large maſſes, of a ſtrong diſagreeable ſmell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taſte; brought to us from the Eaſt, and known to the Greeks; but we are entirely ignorant of the plant which produces this drug. Hill.

O'PPIDAN. n. ſ. [oppidanus, Latin.] A townſman; an inhabitant of a town.

To OPPI'GNERATE. v. a. [oppignero, Latin.] To pledge; to pawn. Not in uſe.

The duke of Guiſe Henry was the greateſt uſurer in France, for that he had turned all his eſtate into obligations; meaning that he had ſold and oppignorated all his patrimony, to give large donatives to other men. Bacon.

Ferdinando merchanded with France, for the reſtoring Rouſſillion and Perpignan, oppignorated to them. Bacon.

To O'PPILATE. v. a. [oppilo, Lat. oppiler, Fr.] To heap up obſtruction.

OPPILA'TION. n. ſ. [oppilation, French; from oppilate.] Obſtruction; matter heaped together.

OPPLE'TED. adj. [oppletus, Latin.] Filled; crowded.

OPPO'NENT. adj. [opponens, Latin,] Oppoſite; adverſe.

Ere the foundations of this earth were laid,
It was opponent to our ſearch ordain'd,
That joy ſtill ſought, ſhould never be attain'd. Prior.

OPPO'NENT. n. ſ. [opponens, Lat.]

1. Antagoniſt; adverſary.

2. One who begins the diſpute by raiſing objections to a tenet, correlative to the defendant or reſpondent.

Inaſmuch as ye go about to deſtroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impoſe on us that which we think not ourſelves bound unto; that therefore ye are not to claim in any conference other than the plaintiffs or opponents part. Hooker.

How becomingly does Philopolis exerciſe his office, and ſeaſonably commit the opponent with the reſpondent, like a long practiſed moderator. More.

OPPORTU'NE. adj. [opportune, Fr. opportunus, Latin.] Seaſonable; convenient; fit; timely; well-timed; proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's felicity, being at the top of all worldly bliſs, and the perpetual conſtancy of his proſperous ſucceſſes, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune. Bacon.

Will lift us up in ſpite of fate,
Nearer our ancient ſeat; perhaps in view
Of thoſe bright confines, whence with neighb'ring arms
And opportune excurſion, we may chance
Re-enter heav'n. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Conſider'd every creature, which of all
Moſt opportune might ſerve his wiles; and found
The ſerpent ſubtleſt beaſt of all the field. Milt.

OPPORTU'NELY. adv. [from opportune.] Seaſonably; conveniently; with opportunity either of time or place.

He was reſolved to chuſe a war rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being ſituate ſo opportunely to annoy England either for coaſt or trade. Bacon's Henry VII.

Againſt theſe is a proper objection, that they offend uniformity; whereof I am therefore opportunely induced to ſay ſomewhat. Wotton.

The experiment does opportunely ſupply the deficiency. Boyle.

O PORTU'NITY. n. ſ. [opportunité, Fr. opportunitas, Lat.] Fit time; fit place; time: convenience; ſuitableneſs of circumſtances to any end.

A wiſe man will make more opportunities than he finds. Mens behaviour ſhould be like their apparel, not too ſtraight, but free for exerciſe. Bacon.

Opportunity, like a ſudden guſt,
Hath ſwell'd my calmer thoughts into a tempeſt.
Accurſed opporunity!
That work'ſt our thoughts into deſires, deſires
To reſolutions; thoſe being ripe and quicken'd,
Thou giv'ſt them birth, and bring'ſt them forth to action. Denham.

Tho' their advice be good, their counſel wiſe,
Yet length ſtill loſes opportunities. Denham.

I had an opportunity to ſee the clouds deſcend, and after it was paſt, to aſcend again ſo high as to get over part of the mountain. Brown's Travels.

Neglect no opportunity of doing good, nor check thy deſire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen. Atterbury.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long deſcriptions of the night. Broome.

To OPPO'SE. v. a. [oppoſer, Fr. oppono, Latin.]

1. To act againſt; to be adverſe; to hinder; to reſiſt.

There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuouſneſs; and my deſire
All continent impediments wou'd o'erbear,
That did oppoſe my will. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

2. To put in oppoſition; to offer as an antagoniſt or rival.

If all men are not naturally equal, I am ſure all ſlaves are; and then I may, without preſumption, oppoſe my ſingle opinion to his. Locke.

3. To place as an obſtacle.

Since he ſtands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me

14. [In architecture.] A system of the several members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilasters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, especially those of a column; so as to form one beautiful whole: or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which some of the parts ought to have, on the account of the proportions that are given them. There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek, viz. the doric, ionic, and corinthian; and two Italian, viz. the tuscan and composite. The whole is composed of two parts at least, the column and the entablature, and of four parts at the most; where there is a pedestal under the columns, and one acroter or little pedestal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts: the base, the shaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the several orders.

In the tuscan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called diameters, by diameters is meant the thickness of the shaft at the bottom, the pedestal having two; the column with base and capital, seven; and the entablature one and three quarter.

In the doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedestal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.

In the ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having two and two thirds, the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.

In the corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having three, the column nine and a half, and the entablature two.

In the composite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedestal having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.

In a colonnade or range of pillars, the intercolumniation or space between columns in the tuscan order, is four diameters. In the doric order, two and three quarters; in the ionic order, two and a quarter; in the corinthian order, two; and in the composite order, one and a half.

Drayton.
Bring them for food ſweet boughs and oſiers cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay rick ſhut. May.
Like her no nymph can willing oſiers bend,
In baſket-works, which painted ſtreaks commend.
Dryden.
Along the marſhes ſpread,
We made the oſier fringed bank our bed. Pope.

O'smund. n. ſ. A plant. It is ſometimes uſed in medicine. It grows upon bogs in divers parts of England. Miller.

O'spray. n. ſ. [corrupted from oſſifraga, Latin.] The ſea-eagle, of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air, all the fiſh in the water turn up their bellies, and lie ſtill for him to ſeize which he pleaſes. Hanmer.
I think he'll be to Rome,
As is the oſpray to the fiſh who takes it,
By ſovereignty of nature. Shakeſ. Coriolanus.
Among the fowls ſhall not be eaten, the eagle, the oſſifrage, and the oſpray. Numbers, xi. 13.

Oſſelet. n. ſ. [French.] A little hard ſubſtance ariſing on the inſide of a horſe's knee, among the ſmall bones; it grows out of a gummy ſubſtance which faſtens thoſe bones together.
Farrier's Dict.

Ossi'cle. n. ſ. [oſſiculum, Lat.] A ſmall bone.
There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whoſe right conſtitution depends the due tenſion of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muſcle, which ſerves to draw one of theſe oſſicles, fixt to the tympanum, be loſt or abated, the tenſion of that membrane ceaſing, ſound is hindered from coming into the ear. Holder on Spe.

Ossi'fick. adj. [oſſa and facio, Lat.] Having the power of making bones, or changing carneous or membranous to bony ſubſtance.
If the caries be ſuperficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments conſume the moiſture in the caries, dry the bone, and diſpoſe it, by virtue of its oſſifick faculty, to thruſt out callus, and make ſeparation of its caries. Wiſeman.

Ossifica'tion. n. ſ. [from oſſify.] Change of carneous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony ſubſtance.
Oſſifications or indurations of the artery, appear ſo conſtantly in the beginnings of aneuriſms, that it is not eaſy to judge whether they are the cauſe or the effect of them. Sharp.

Ossi'frage. n. ſ. [oſſifraga, Lat. oſſifrague, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whoſe fleſh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The oſſifraga or oſpray, is thus called, becauſe it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is ſaid to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occaſion that the Latins call it avis oſtraria. See Ospray. Calmet.

To O'ssify. v. a. [oſſa and facio.] To change to bone.
The dilated aorta every where in the neighbourhood of the cyſt is generally oſſifyed. Sharp's Surg.

Ossi'vorous. adj. [oſſa and voro.] Devouring bones.
The bore of the gullet is not in all creatures like anſwerable to the body or ſtomach: as in the fox, which feeds on bones, and ſwallows whole, or with little chewing; and next in a dog and other oſſivorous quadrupeds, it is very large.
Derham's Phyſico-Theology.

O'ssuary. n. ſ. [oſſuarium, Lat.] A charnel houſe; a place where the bones of dead people are kept. Dict.

To pleaſe his grandam. Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.
2. Show; token. Theſe ſenſes are peculiar to Shakeſpeare.
Be merry, and employ your chiefeſt thoughts
To courtſhip, and ſuch fair oſtents of love
As ſhall conveniently become you there. Shakeſp.
3. A portent; a prodigy; any thing ominous.
To ſtirre our zeales up, that admir'd, whereof a fact ſo cleane
Of all ill as our ſacrifice, ſo fearfull an oſtent,
Should be the iſſue. Chapman.
Latinus, frighted with this dire oſtent,
For counſel to his father Faunus went;
And ſought the ſhades renown'd for prophecy,
Which near Alburia's ſulph'rous fountain lie. Dry.

Ostenta'tion. n. ſ. [oſtentation, Fr. oſtentatio, Latin.]
1. Outward ſhow; appearance.
If theſe ſhows be not outward, which of you,
But is four Volſcians?—
—March on my fellows;
Make good this oſtentation, and you ſhall
Divide in all with us. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.
You are come
A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented
The oſtentation of our love. Shakeſpeare.
2. Ambitious diſplay; boaſt; vain ſhow. This is the uſual ſenſe.
If all theſe ſecret ſprings of detraction fail, yet a vain oſtentation of wit ſets a man on attacking an eſtabliſhed name, and ſacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of thoſe about him. Addiſon's Spectator.
He knew that good and bountiful minds were ſometimes inclined to oſtentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, ſays he, that you do not your alms before men, to be ſeen. Atterbury.
With all her luſtre, now, her lover warms;
Then out of oſtentation, hides her charms. Young.
The great end of the art is to ſtrike the imagination. The painter is therefore to make no oſtentation of the means by which this is done; the ſpectator is only to feel the reſult in his boſom.
Reynolds.
3. A ſhow; a ſpectacle. Not in uſe.
The king would have me preſent the princeſs with ſome delightful oſtentation, ſhow, pageant, antick, or firework. Shakeſp. Love's Labour Loſt.

OSTENTA'TIOUS. adj. [oſtento, Lat.] Boaſtful; vain; fond of ſhow; fond to expoſe to view.
Your modeſty is ſo far from being oſtentatious of the good you do, that it bluſhes even to have it known; and therefore I muſt leave you to the ſatisfaction of our own conſcience, which, though a ſilent panegyrick, is yet the beſt. Dryden.
They let Ulyſſes into his diſpoſition, and he ſeems to be ignorant, credulous and oſtentatious.
Broome on the Odyſſey.

Ostenta'tiously. adv. [from oſtentatious.] Vainly; boaſtfully.

O'stracism. n. ſ. [ὀστρακισμὸς; oſtraciſme, Fr.] A manner of paſſing ſentence, in which the note of acquital or condemnation was marked upon a ſhell which the voter threw into a veſſel. Baniſhment; publick cenſure.
Virtue in courtiers hearts
Suffers an oſtraciſm, and departs;
Profit, eaſe, fitneſs, plenty, bid it go,
But whither, only knowing you, I know. Donne.
Publick envy is as an oſtraciſm, that eclipſeth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bridle to keep them within bounds. Bacon's Eſſays.
Hyperbolus by ſuffering did traduce
The oſtraciſm, and ſham'd it out of uſe. Clearveland.
This man, upon a ſlight and falſe accuſation of favouring arbitrary power, was baniſhed by oſtraciſm; which in Engliſh would ſignify, that they voted he ſhould be removed from their preſence and council for ever. Swift.

O'stracites. n. ſ. Oſtracites expreſſes the common oyſter in its foſſil ſtate. Hill's Mat. Med.

O'strich. n. ſ. [autruche, Fr. ſtruthio, Lat.] Oſtrich is ranged among birds. It is very large, its wings very ſhort, and the neck about four or five ſpans. The feathers of its wings are in great eſteem, and are uſed as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are ſtained of ſeveral colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of courſe, for they never fly; but uſe their wings to aſſiſt them in running more ſwiftly. The oſtrich ſwallows bits of iron or braſs, in the ſame manner as other birds will ſwallow ſmall ſtones or gravel, to aſſiſt in digeſting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the ſand, and the ſun hatches them. Calmet.
I'll make thee eat iron like an oſtrich, and ſwallow my ſword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.
Shakeſpeare.
Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the oſtrich. Job.
The Scots errant fight, and fight to eat,
Their oſtrich ſtomachs make their ſwords their meat. Cleaveland.
Modern oſtriches are dwindled to meer larks, in compariſon with thoſe of the ancients. Arbuthnot.

Otacou'stick. n. ſ. [ὠτα and ἀκούω; otacouſtique, Fr.] An inſtrument to facilitate hearing.
In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is ſupplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacouſtick, is ſo directed backward, as to receive the ſmalleſt and moſt diſtant ſound that comes behind her. Grew's Coſmol.

O'ther. pron. [uðep, Sax. autre, Fr.]
1. Not the ſame; not this; different. In this ſenſe it ſeems an adjective, yet in the plural, when the ſubſtantive is ſuppreſſed, it has contrarily to the nature of adjectives a plural termination; as, of laſt week three days were fair, the others rainy.
Of good actions ſome are better than other ſome.
Hooker.

Will it not be received
That they have don't,
Who dares receive it other? Shakesp. Macbeth.

The dismayed matrons and maidens, some in their houses, other some in the churches, with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard distress. Knolles.

He that will not give just occasion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beasts, where the strongest carries; and so lay a foundation for perpetual disorder and mischief, tumult, sedition and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypothesis so loudly cry out against, must of necessity find out another state of government. Locke.

No leases shall ever be made other than leases for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion of remainder. Swift.

2. Not I, or he, but some one else; in this sense it is a substantive, and has a genitive and plural.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels and this other's house. Shakespeare.

Physicians are some of them so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the cure of the disease; and some other are so regular in proceeding according to art, as they respect not the condition of the patient. Bacon.

The confusion arises, when the one will put their sickle into the other's harvest. Lesley.

Never allow yourselves to be idle, whilst others are in want of any thing that your hands can make for them. Law.

The king had all he crav'd, or could compel,
And all was done—let others judge how well.
Daniel.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contray.

There is that controling worth in goodness, that the will cannot but like and desire it; and on the other side, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itself to the affections of mankind, but under the disguise of the other. South.

4. Correlative to each.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Phil. ii. 3.

Scotland and thou did each in other live,
Nor would'st thou her, nor could she thee survive.
Dryden.

5. Something besides.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can. Locke on Education.

6. The next.

Thy air,
Thou other gold bound brow, is like the first;
A third is like the former. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

7. The third past.

Bind my hair up: as 'twas yesterday:
No, nor the t' other day. Ben Jonson.

8. It is sometimes put elliptically for other thing; something different.

I can expect no other from those that judge by single sights and rash measures, than to be thought fond or infolent. Glanville.

O'THERGATES. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

If sir Toby had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did. Shakespeare.

O'THERWHERE. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had access to the temple and synagogues, but as Christians they were of necessity forced otherwhere to assemble themselves. Hooker.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce,
And former sufferings, otherwhere are found. Milt.

O'THERWHILE. adv. [other and while.] At other times.

O'THERWISE. adv. [other and wise.]

1. In a different manner.

They only plead, that whatsoever God revealeth, as necessary for all Christian men to do and believe, the same we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwise, which no man denieth. Hooker.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the same thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or else otherwise, without any breach of duty at all. Hooker.

The evidences for such things are not so infallible, but that there is a possibility, that the things may be otherwise. Wilkins.

In these good things, what all others should practise, we should scarce know to practise otherwise. Wilkins.

Thy father was a worthy prince,
And merited, alas! a better fate;
But heaven thought otherwise. Addison's Cato.

2. By other causes.

Sir John Norris failed in the attempts of Lisborn, and returned with the loss, by sickness and otherwise, of eight thousand men. Raleigh.

3. In other respects.

It is said truly, that the best men otherwise, are not always the best in regard of society. Hooker.

Men seldom consider God any otherwise than in relation to themselves, and therefore want some extraordinary benefits to excite their attention, and engage their love. Rogers.

O'TTER. n. s. [oter, Saxon; lutra.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fish.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better swimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the bevir; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canin; and in his tail, which is felin, or a long taper: so that he may not be unfitly called putoreus aquaticus, or the water polecat. He makes himself burrows on the waterside, as a bevir; is sometimes tamed and taught by nimbly surrounding the fishes to drive them into the net. Grew.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's skin stuffed with hay. Addison's Spectator.

Would you preserve a num'rous finny race?
Let your fierce dogs the rav'nous otter chase;
Th' amphibious monster ranges all the shores,
Darts thro' the waves, and ev'ry haunt explores.
Gay.

O'VAL. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, an egg] Oblong; resembling the longitudinal section of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itself on both sides in an oval figure of an hundred yards. Addison on Italy.

Mercurius, nearest to the central sun,
Does in an oval orbit, circling run;
But rarely is the object of our sight,
In solar glory sunk. Blackmore.

O'VAL. n. s.

A triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the shape of an egg. Watts.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability; ſuitable to that ſtate of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein to check our over-confidence and preſumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made ſenſible of our ſhort ſightedneſs. Locke.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as ſome others over-diligently cultivated. It is eaſy for men to write one after another of caſes and genders. Locke.

It is an ill way of eſtabliſhing this truth, and ſilencing atheiſts, to take ſome men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity; and out of an overfondneſs of that darling invention, caſhier all other arguments. Locke.

A grown perſon ſurfeiting with honey, no ſooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries ſickneſs and qualms to his ſtomach: had this happened to him by an overdoſe of honey, when a child, all the ſame effects would have followed, but the cauſe would have been miſtaken, and the antipathy counted natural. Locke.

Take care you over-burn not the turf; it is only to be burnt ſo as may make it break. Mortimer.

Don't over-fatigue the ſpirits, leſt the mind be ſeized with a laſſitude, and thereby naufeate and grow tir'd of a particular ſubject. Watts.

The memory of the learner ſhould not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas, one idea effaces another. An over-greedy graſp does not retain the largeſt handful. Watts.

To OVER-ABOUND. v. n. [over and abound.] To abound more than enough.

Both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, ſo rich the ſoil,
So much does fructuous moiſture o'er-abound. Phil.

The learned, never over-abounding in tranſitory coin, ſhould not be diſcontented. Pope's Letters.

To OVER-ACT. v. a. [over and act.] To act more than enough.

You over-act, when you ſhould undergo;
A little call yourſelf again, and think. Ben Jonſon.

Princes courts may over-act their reverence, and make themſelves laughed at for their fooliſhneſs and extravagant relative worſhip. Stilling fleet.

Good men often blemiſh the reputation of their piety, by over-acting ſome things in religion; by an indiſcreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotſon.

He over-acted his part; his paſſions, when once let looſe, were too impetuous to be managed. Atterbury.

To OVER-A'RCH. v. a. [over and arch.] To cover as with an arch.

Where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching ſhades and pendant woods. Pope.

To OVER-A'WE. v. a. [over and awe.] To keep in awe by ſuperior influence.

The king was preſent in perſon to overlook the magiſtrates, and to over-awe theſe ſubjects with the terror of his ſword. Spenſer on Ireland.

Her graceful innocence, her every air,
Of geſture, or leaſt action, over-aw'd
His malice. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and ſounding in your ears the empty title which inſpired you with preſumption, and over-awed my daughter to comply. Addiſon's Guardian.

A thouſand fears
Still over-awe when ſhe appears. Granville's Poems.

To OVER-BA'LANCE. v. a. To weigh down; to preponderate.

Not doubting but by the weight of reaſon I ſhould counterpoiſe the over-balancings of any factions. King Charles.

The hundred thouſand pounds per annum, wherein we over-balance them in trade, muſt be paid us in money. Locke.

When theſe important conſiderations are ſet before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, ſhould a bare ſingle poſſibility be of weight enough to over-balance them. Rogers.

OVER-BA'LANCE. n. ſ. [over and balance.] Something more than equivalent.

Our exported commodities would, by the return, encreaſe the treaſure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, than a mighty over-balance of our exported to our imported commodities. Temple.

The mind ſhould be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either ſide, any further than the over-balance of probability gives it the turn of aſſent and belief. Locke.

OVER-BA'TTLE. adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; batten is to grow fat, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on truſt.] Too fruitful; exuberant.

In the church of God ſometimes it cometh to paſs, as in over-battle grounds; the fertile diſpoſition whereof is good, yet becauſe it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth abundantly through too much rankneſs, things leſs profitable, whereby that which principally it ſhould yield, either prevented in place or defrauded of nouriſhment, faileth. Hooker.

To OVER-BE'AR. v. a. [over and bear.] To repreſs; to ſubdue; to whelm; to bear down.

What more ſavage than man, if he ſee himſelf able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws? Hooker.

My deſire
All continent impediment would over-bear,
That did oppoſe my will. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

The ocean o'er-peering of his liſt,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haſte
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head
O'er-bears your officers. Shakeſpeare.

Our

Our counſel, it pleas'd your highneſs
To over-bear. Shakeſpeare's King John.

Glo'ſter, thou ſhalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The biſhop will be over-born by thee. Shakeſpeare.

The Turkiſh commanders, with all their forces, aſſailed the city, thruſting their men into the breaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have diſcouraged or over-born the Chriſtians. Knolles.

The point of reputation, when news firſt came of the battle loſt, did over-bear the reaſon of war. Bacon.

Yet fortune, valour, all is over-born,
By numbers; as the long reſiſting bank
By the impetuous torrent. Denham.

A body may as well be over-born by the violence of a ſhallow, rapid ſtream, as ſwallowed up in the gulph of ſmooth water. L'Eſtrange.

Crowding on the laſt the firſt impel;
Till over-born with weight the Cyprians fell. Dryd.

The judgment, if ſwayed by the over-bearing of paſſion, and ſtored with lubricous opinions inſtead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous. Glanville's Sceptis.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap, or over-bearing multitude of documents at one time. Watts.

The horror or loathſomneſs of an object may over-bear the pleaſure which reſults from its greatneſs, novelty, or beauty. Addiſon's Spectator.

To OVER-BI'D. v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have o'er-bid all my paſt ſufferings,
And all my future too. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

To OVER-BLO'W. v. n. [over and blow.] To be paſt its violence.

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Until the bluſtring ſtorm is over-blown. Spenſer.

All thoſe tempeſts being over-blown, there long after aroſe a new ſtorm which over-run all Spain. Spenſer.

This ague fit of fear is over-blown,
An eaſy taſk it is to win our own. Shak. Rich. II.

Seiz'd with ſecret joy,
When ſtorms are over-blown. Dryden's Virgil.

To OVER-BLO'W. v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Some angel that beholds her there,
Inſtruct us to record what ſhe was here;
And when this cloud of ſorrow's over-blown,
Thro' the wide world we'll make her graces known. Waller.

OVER-BO'ARD. adv. [over and board. See BOARD.] Off the ſhip; out of the ſhip.

The great aſſembly met again; and now he that was the cauſe of the tempeſt being thrown over-board, there were hopes a calm ſhould enſue. Howel.

A merchant having a veſſel richly fraught at ſea in a ſtorm, there is but one certain way to ſave it, which is, by throwing its rich lading over-board. South.

The trembling dotard, to the deck he drew,
And hoiſted up and over-board he threw;
This done, he ſeiſed the helm. Dryden.

He obtained liberty to give them only one ſong before he leaped over-board, which he did, and then plunged into the ſea. L'Eſtrange.

Though great ſhips were commonly bad ſea-boats, they had a ſuperiour force in a ſea engagement: the ſhock of them being ſometimes ſo violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of leſſer ſhips overboard. Arbuthnot.

To OVER-BU'LK. v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppreſs by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, muſt or now be cropt,
Or ſhedding, breed a nurſery of like evils,
To over-bulk us all. Shakeſp. Troil. and Creſſida.

To OVER-BU'RDEN. v. a. [over and burthen.] To load with too great weight.

If ſhe were not cloyed with his company, and that ſhe thought not the earth over-burthened with him, ſhe would cool his fiery grief.

To OVER-BU'Y. v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He, when want requires, is only wiſe,
Who ſlights not foreign aids, nor over-buys;
But on our native ſtrength, in time of need, relies. Dryden.

To OVER-CA'RRY. v. a. [over and carry.] To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to ſucceed; by reaſon whereof his natural affection and duty was leſs eaſy to be over-carried by ambition. Hayward.

To OVER-CA'ST. v. a. part. over-caſt. [over and caſt.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

As they paſt,
The day with clouds was ſudden over-caſt. Spenſer.

Hie, Robin, over-caſt the night;
The ſtarry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron. Shakeſp.

Our days of age are ſad and over-caſt, in which we find that of all our vain paſſions and affections paſt, the ſorrow only abideth. Raleigh's Hiſt.

I of fumes and humid vapours made,
No cloud in ſo ſerene a manſion find,
To over-caſt her ever ſhining mind. Waller.

Thoſe clouds that over-caſt our morn ſhall fly,
Diſpell'd to fartheſt corners of the ſky. Dryd. n.

The dawn is over-caſt, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addiſon.

2. To cover. This ſenſe is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is incircled with a thread, over-caſt.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the ſuſpicion of an evil intent, the colour wherewith it over-caſteth itſelf is always a fair and plauſible pretence of ſeeking to further that which is good. Hooker.

Their arms abroad with gray moſs over-caſt,
And their green leaves trembling with every blaſt. Spenſer.

3. To rate too high in computation.

The king, in his accompt of peace and calms, did much over-caſt his fortunes, which proved full of broken ſeas, tides, and tempeſts. Bacon's Hen.

To OVER-CHA'RGE. v. a. [over and charge.]

1. To oppreſs; to cloy; to ſurcharge.

On air we feed in every inſtant, and on meats but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppreſs and over-charge nature, maketh her to ſink unawares in the mid-way. Raleigh's Hiſt. of the World.

A man may as well expect to grow ſtronger by always eating, as wiſer by always reading. Too much over-charges nature, and turns more into diſeaſe than nouriſhment. Collier.

2. To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is over-charged with conſonants. Pope.

3. To burthen.

He whiſpers to his pillow,

You break into ſome merry paſſion. Shakeſp.

To OVER-E'MPTY. v. a. [over and empty.] To make too empty.

The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in new-fangledness of the manner, if not in costliness of the matter, which might over-empty their husbands purses. Carew.

O'VERFAL. n. s. [over and fall.] Cataract.

Tostatus addeth, that those which dwell near those falls of water, are deaf from their infancy, like those that dwell near the over-falls of Nilus. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

To OVER-FLO'AT. v. n. [over and float.] To swim; to float.

The town is fill'd with slaughter, and o'er-floats
With a red deluge, their increasing moats. Dryden.

To OVER-FLO'W. v. n. [over and flow.]

1. To be fuller than the brim can hold.

While our strong walls secure us from the foe,
E'er yet with blood our ditches over-flow. Dryden.

Had I the same consciousness that I saw Noah's flood, as that I saw the over-flowing of the Thames last winter, I could not doubt, that I who saw the Thames over-flowed, and viewed the flood at the general deluge, was the same self. Locke.

2. To exuberate; to abound.

A very ungrateful return to the author of all we enjoy, but such as an over-flowing plenty too much inclines men to make. Rogers.

To OVER-FLO'W. v. a. pret. over-flowed, part. pass. over-flowed, or over-flown.

1. To fill beyond the brim.

Suppose thyself in as great a sadness as ever did load thy spirit, would'st thou not bear it cheerfully if thou wert sure that some excellent fortune would relieve and recompense thee so as to over-flow all thy hopes. Taylor.

New milk that all the winter never fails,
And all the summer over-flows the pails. Dryden.

2. To deluge; to drown; to over-run; to over-power.

3. To smother: to crush; to overwhelm.

They quickly stifled and over-laid those infant principles of piety and virtue, sown by God in their hearts; so that they brought a voluntary darkness and stupidity upon their minds. South.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Ptolemy:
A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'er-lays your fire. Dryden.

The stars, no longer over-laid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mass,
And upward shoot. Dryden.

Season the passions of a child with devotion, which seldom dies; though it may seem extinguished for a while, it breaks out as soon as misfortunes have brought the man to himself. The fire may be covered and over-laid, but cannot be entirely quenched and smothered. Addis. Spect.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust to the fund of their own reason, advanced but not over-laid by commerce with books. Swift.

4. To cloud: to overcast.

Phœbus' golden face it did attaint,
As when a cloud his beams doth over-lay. Spenser.

This is an over-officious truth, and is always at a man's heels; ſo that if he looks about him, he muſt take notice of it. Collier on Reaſon.

To OVERPA'SS. v. a. [over and paſs.]

1. To croſs.

I ſtood on a wide river's bank,
Which I muſt needs o'er-paſs,
When on a ſudden Torriſmond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er. Dryd.

What have my Scyllas and my Syrtes done,
When theſe they o'er-paſs, and thoſe they ſhun?
Dryden.

2. To over-look; to paſs with diſregard.

The complaint about pſalms and hymns might as well be over-paſt without any anſwer, as it is without any cauſe brought forth. Hooker.

I read the ſatire thou entitleſt firſt,
And laid aſide the reſt, and over-paſs,
And ſwore, I thought the writer was accurſt,
That his firſt ſatire had not been his laſt. Harrington.

Remember that Pelean conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the eaſt
He ſlightly view'd, and ſlightly over-paſs'd. Milton.

3. To omit in a reckoning.

Arithmetical progreſſion demonſtrates how faſt mankind would increaſe, over-paſſing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Iſraelites who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from ſeventy to ſixty thouſand able men. Raleigh.

4. To omit; not to receive; not to compriſe.

If the grace of him which ſaveth over-paſs ſome, ſo that the prayer of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgments of righteouſneſs. Hooker.

O'VERPA'ST. part. adj. [from over-paſt.] Gone; paſt.

When I have found it. Shakeſpeare.

You have yourſelf, your kindneſs over-paid,
He ceaſes to oblige who can upbraid. Dryden.

Wilt thou with pleaſure hear thy lover's ſtrains,
And with one heav'nly ſmile o'er-pay his pains.
Prior.

To OVERPE'RCH. v. a. [over and perch.] To fly over.

With love's light wings did I o'er-perch theſe walls,
For ſtony limits cannot hold love out. Shakeſpeare.

To OVERPE'ER. v. a. [over and peer.] To over-look; to hover above. It is now out of uſe.

The ocean over-peering of his liſt,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haſte,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'er-bears your officers. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

Your Argoſies with portly ſail,
Do over-peer the petty traffickers,
That curt'ſey to them, do them reverence. Shakeſp.

Mountainous error wou'd be too highly heapt,
For truth to o'er-peer. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Thus yields the cedar to the ax's edge,
Whoſe top branch o'er-peer'd Jove's ſpreading tree,
And kept low ſhrubs from winter's pow'rful wind.
Shakeſpeare.

They are invincible by reaſon of the over-peering mountains that back the one, and ſlender fortifications of the other to landward. Sandys's Journey.

OVERPLUS. n. ſ. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than ſufficient.

Some other ſinners there are, from which that overplus of ſtrength in perſuaſion doth ariſe. Hooker.

A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus remained ſtill in the mortar. L'Eſtrange.

It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune. Addiſon.

To OVERPLY'. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriouſly.

What ſupports me, doſt thou aſk?
The conſcience, friend, t' have loſt them overply'd,
In liberty's defence. Milton's Poems.

To OVERPO'ISE. v. a. [over and poiſe.] To outweigh.

Whether cripples who have loſt their thighs will float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others over-poiſed by the hinder legs; we have not made experiment. Brown.

The ſcale
O'er-pois'd by darkneſs, lets the night prevail;
And day, that lengthen'd in the ſummer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is loſt in night. Creech.

OVERPO'ISE. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Preponderant weight.

Horace, in his firſt and ſecond book of odes, was ſtill riſing, but came not to his meridian till the third. After which his judgment was an overpoiſe to his imagination. He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he deſcended in his fourth by ſlow degrees. Dryden.

Some over-poiſe of ſway, by turns they ſhare,
In peace the people, and the prince in war. Dryd.

To OVERPO'WER. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over: to oppreſs by ſuperiority.

Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be over-power'd. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

As much light over-powers the eye, ſo they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with ſnow, are wont to complain of too much light. Boyle.

Reaſon allows none to be confident, but him only who governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and can neither be ſurpriſed nor over-powered. Sou h.

After the death of Craſſus, Pompey found himſelf outwitted by Cæſar; he broke with him, overpowered him in the ſenate, and cauſed many unjuſt decrees to paſs againſt him. Dryden's Ded. to Æn.

The hiſtorians make theſe mountains the ſtandards of the riſe of the water; which they could never have been, had they not been ſtanding when it did ſo riſe and over-power the earth. Woodward.

Inſpiration is, when ſuch an over-powering impreſſion of any propoſition is made upon the mind by God himſelf, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it. Watts's Logick.

To OVERPRE'SS. v. a. [over and preſs.] To bear upon with irreſiſtible force; to overwhelm; to cruſh.

Having an excellent horſe under him, when he was over-preſſed by ſome, he avoided them. Sidney.

Michael's arm main promontories flung,
And over-preſs'd whole legions weak with ſin. Roſ.

When a prince enters on a war, he ought maturely to conſider whether his coffers be full, his people rich by a long peace and free trade, not over-preſſed with many burthenſome taxes. Swift.

To OVERPRI'ZE. v. a. [over and prize.] To value at too high price.

Parents over-prize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection. Wotton.

To OVERRA'TE. v. a. [over and rate.] To rate at too much.

While vain ſhows and ſcenes you over-rate,
'Tis to be fear'd,———
That as a fire the former houſe o'erthrew,
Machines and tempeſts will deſtroy the new. Dry.

To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to over-rate the conveniencies of our ſtation, and in eſtimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather low than high; for our deſires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary, and our temptations to our deſires. Rogers.

To OVERREA'CH. v. a. [over and reach.]

1. To riſe above.

The mountains of Olympus, Atho and Atlas, over-reach and ſurmount all winds and clouds. Ral.

Sixteen hundred years after the earth was made, it was overflowed in a deluge of water in ſuch exceſs, that the floods over-reached the tops of the higheſt mountains. Burnet.

2. To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent.

A ſagacious man is ſaid to have a long reach.

What more cruel than man, if he ſee himſelf able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to overbear the laws whereunto he ſhould be ſubject. Hooker.

I have laid My brain in the ſun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent ſo groſs over-reaching. Shakeſpeare.

Shame to be overcome, or over-reach'd,
Would utmoſt vigour raiſe, and rais'd unite. Milt.

A man who had been matchleſs held
In cunning, over-reach'd where leaſt he thought,
To ſave his credit, and for very ſpight
Still will be tempting him who foils him ſtill. Milt.

There is no pleaſanter encounter than a trial of ſkill betwixt ſharpers to over-reach one another. L'Eſtrange.

Forbidding oppreſſion, defrauding and over-reaching one another, perfidiouſneſs and treachery. Tillotſon.

We may no more ſue for them than we can tell a lie, or ſwear an unlawful oath, or over-reach in their cauſe, or be guilty of any other tranſgreſſion. Kettleworth.

Such a principle is ambition, or a deſire of fame, by which many vicious men are over-reached, and engaged contrary to their natural inclinations in a glorious and laudable courſe of action. Addiſon.

John had got an impreſſion that Lewis was ſo deadly cunning a man, that he was afraid to venture himſelf alone with him; at laſt he took heart of grace; let him come up, quoth he, it is but ſticking to my point, and he can never over-reach me. Hiſtory of John Bull.

To OVERRE'ACH. v. n. A horſe is ſaid to over-reach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forwards, and ſtrikes his toes againſt his fore ſhoes. Farrier's Dict.

Thou lily-liver'd boy. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

To OVERROAST. v. a. [over and roaſt.] To roaſt too much.

'Twas burnt and dried away,
And better 'twere that both of us did faſt,
Since of ourſelves, ourſelves are cholerick,
Than feed it with ſuch over-roaſted fleſh. Shakeſp.

To OVERRULE. v. a. [over and rule.]

1. To influence with predominant power; to be ſuperior in authority.

Which humour perceiving to over-rule me, I ſtrave againſt it. Sidney.

That which the church by her eccleſiaſtical authority ſhall probably think and deſire to be true or good, muſt in congruity of reaſon over-rule all other inferior arguments whatſoever. Hooker.

Except our own private, and but probable reſolutions, be by the law of public determinations over-ruled, we take away all poſſibility of ſociable life in the world. Hooker.

What if they be ſuch as will be over-ruled with ſome one, whom they dare not diſpleaſe Whitgifte.

His paſſion and animoſity over-ruled his conſcience. Clarendon.

A wiſe man ſhall over-rule his ſtars, and have a greater influence upon his own content, than all the conſtellations and planets of the firmament. Taylor.

He is acted by a paſſion which abſolutely over-rules him; and ſo can no more recover himſelf, than a bowl rolling down an hill ſtop itſelf in the midſt of its career. South.

'Tis temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; unleſs where they are obliged by an over-ruling impulſe of conſcience and duty. L'Eſtrange.

A man may, by the influence of an over-ruling planet, be inclined to luſt, and yet by the force of reaſon overcome that bad influence. Swift.

2. To govern with high authority; to ſuperintend.

Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly over-rule, as in other matters he is acouſtomed? Hayward.

3. To ſuperſede: as in law to over-rule a plea, is to reject it as incompetent.

Thirty acres make a farthing land, nine farthings a Corniſh acre, and four Corniſh acres a kight's fee. But this rule is over-ruled, to a greater or leſſer quantity, according to the fruitfulneſs or barrenneſs of the ſoil. Carew.

To OVERRUN. v. a. [over and run.]

1. To haraſs by incurſions; to ravage; to rove over in a hoſtile manner.

Thoſe barbarous nations that over-ran the world, poſſeſſed thoſe dominions, whereof they are now ſo called. Spenſer.

Till the tears ſhe ſhed,
Like envious floods o'er-ran her lovely face,
She was the faireſt creature in the world. Shakeſp.

They err, who count it glorious to ſubdue
By conqueſt far and wide, to over-run
Large countries, and in field great battles win,
Great cities by aſſault. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The nine
Their fainting foes to ſhameful flight compell'd
And with reſiſtleſs force o'er-run the field. Dryden.

Guſtaphus Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having over-run moſt of the reſt. Addiſon.

A commonwealth may be over-run by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad conſequences upon your trade and liberty. Swift.

4. To be out-run; to paſs behind.

Pyrocles being come to ſixteen, over-run his age in growth, ſtrength, and all things following it, that not Muſidorus could perform any action on horſe or foot more ſtrongly, or deliver that ſtrength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuouſly. Sidney.

We may out-run
By violent ſwiftneſs, that which we run at,
And loſe by over-running. Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.

Ahimaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cuſhi. 2 Sam. xviii. 23.

Galilæus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faſter than the water can follow, the water gathereth upon an heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he ſuppoſeth, holding the motion of the earth to be the cauſe of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; becauſe the earth over-runneth the water. Bacon.

3. To overſpread; to cover all over.

With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nah. i. 8.

This diſpoſition of the parts of the earth, ſhews us the footſteps of ſome kind of ruin which happened in ſuch a way, that at the ſame time a general flood of waters would neceſſarily over-run the whole earth. Burnet.

His tears defac'd the ſurface of the well,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er-run with wrinkles and deform'd with tears. Addiſon.

4. To miſchief by great numbers; to peſter.

To flatter fooliſh men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the ſame with betraying people into an opinion, that they are in a virtuous and happy ſtate, when they are over-run with paſſion, and drowned in their luſts. L'Eſtrange.

Were it not for the inceſſant labours of this induſtrious animal, Egypt would be over-run with crocodiles. Addiſon.

Shakeſpeare.

Out-ſtretch'd he lay, on the cold ground, and oft Curs'd his creation. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

A mountain, at whoſe verdant feet
A ſpacious plain, out-ſtretch'd in circuit wide
Lay pleaſant. Milton's Paradiſe Regained.

Does Theſeus burn?
And muſt not ſhe with out-ſtretch'd arms receive him?
And with an equal ardour meet his vows? Smith.

To OUTSTRIP. v. a. [This word Skinner derives from out and ſpritzen, to ſpout, German. I know not whether it might not have been originally out-trip, the ſ being afterward inſerted.] To outgo; to leave behind in a race.

If thou wilt out-ſtrip death, go croſs the ſeas,
And live with Richmond from the reach of hell.
Shakeſpeare.

Do not ſmile at me, that I boaſt her off;
For thou ſhalt find, ſhe will out-ſtrip all praiſe,
And make it halt behind her. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

Thou both their graces in thyſelf haſt more
Out-ſtript, than they did all that went before.
Ben Jonſon.

My ſoul, more earneſtly releas'd,
Will out-ſtrip hers; as bullets flown before
A latter bullet may o'ertake, the powder being more. Donne.

The ſparks ſoon quench, the ſpringing weed out-weed. Spenſer.

To OUTWEI'GH. v. a. [out and weigh.]

1. To exceed in gravity.

Theſe inſtruments require ſo much ſtrength for the ſupporting of the weight to be moved, as may be equal unto it, beſides that other ſuperadded power whereby it is outweighed and moved. Wilkins's Mathemat. Magick.

2. To preponderate; to excel in value or influence.

If any think brave death out-weighs bad life
Let him expreſs his diſpoſition. Shakeſpeare.

All your care is for your prince I ſee,
Your truth to him out-weighs your love to me. Dr.

Whenever he finds the hardſhip of his ſlavery out-weigh the value of his life, it is in his power, by reſiſting the will of his maſter, to draw on himſelf the death he deſires. Locke.

The marriage of the clergy is attended with the poverty of ſome of them, which is balanced and out-weighed by many ſingle advantages. Atter.

To OUTWE'LL. v. a. [out and well.] To pour out. Not in uſe.

As when old father Nilus 'gins to ſwell,
With timely pride about the Ægyptian vale,
His fattie waves do fertile ſlime out-well,
And overflow each plain and lowly dale. Spenſer.

To OUTWI'T. v. a. [out and wit.] To cheat; to overcome by ſtratagem.

The truer hearted any man is, the more liable he is to be impoſed on; and then the world calls it out-witting a man, when he is only out-knaved. L'Eſtrange.

Juſtice forbids defrauding, or going beyond our brother in any manner, when we can over-reach and out-wit him in the ſame. Kettlewell.

After the death of Craſſus, Pompey found himſelf out-witted by Cæſar, and broke with him. Dry.

Nothing is more equal in juſtice, and indeed more natural in the direct conſequence of effects and cauſes, than for men wickedly wiſe to out-wit themſelves; and for ſuch as wreſtle with Providence, to trip up their own heels. South.

OU'TWORK. n. ſ. [out and work.] The parts of a fortification next the enemy.

Take care of our out-work, the navy royal, which are the walls of the kingdom; and every great ſhip is an impregnable fort; and our many ſafe and commodious ports as the redoubts to ſecure them. Bacon.

Death hath taken in the out-works,
And now aſſails the fort; I feel, I feel him
Gnawing my heart-ſtrings. Denham.

OUTWO'RN. part. [from out-wear.] Conſumed or deſtroyed by uſe.

A beggar's book
Out-worths a noble's blood. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

To Owe. v. a. [eg, aa, I owe, or I ought, Islanick.]

1. To be obliged to pay: to be indebted.

I owe you much, and, like a witless youth,
That which I owe is lost. Shakesp. Merch. Venice.

Let none seek needless causes to approve
The faith they owe. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A son owes help and honour to his father; and is a subject less indebted to the king. Holyday.

All your parts of pious duty done,
You owe your Ormond nothing but a son. Dryd.

Thou hast deserv'd more love than I can show,
But 'tis thy fate to give, and mine to owe. Dryd.

If, upon the general balance of trade, English merchants owe to foreigners one hundred thousand pounds, if commodities do not, our money must go out to pay it. Locke.

2. To be obliged to ascribe; to be obliged for.

By me upheld, that he may know how frail
His fallen condition is, and to me owe
All his deliv'rance, and to none but me. Milton.

3. To have from any thing as the consequence of a cause.

O doem thy fall not ow'd to man's decree,
Jove hated Greece, and punish'd Greece in thee.
Pope.

4. To possess; to be the right owner of. For owe, which is, in this sense, obsolete, we now use own.

Thou dost her usurp
The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy. Shakesp. Tempest.

Fate, shew thy force; ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be; and be this so. Shak.

Not poppy nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'dst yesterday. Shakesp. Othello.

If any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Crashaw.

Owing. part. [from owe. A practice has long prevailed among writers, to use owing, the active participle of owe, in a passive sense, for owed or due. Of this impropriety some writers were aware, and having no quick sense of the force of English words, have used due, in the sense of consequence or imputation, which by other writers is only used of debt. We say, the money is due to me; they say likewise, the effect is due to the cause.]

1. Consequential.

This was owing to an indifference to the pleasures of life, and an aversion to the pomps of it.
Atterbury.

2. Due as a debt. Here due is undoubtedly the proper word.

You are both too bold;
I'll teach you all what's owing to your queen. Dry.

The debt, owing from one country to the other, cannot be paid without real effects sent thither to that value. Locke.

3. Imputable to, as an agent.

If we estimate things, what in them is owing to nature, and what to labour, we shall find in most of them 99-100ths to be on the account of labour. Locke.

The custom of particular impeachments was not limited any more than that of struggles between nobles and commons, the ruin of Greece was owing to the former, as that of Rome was to the latter. Swift.

Owl. } n. s. [ule, Saxon; hulote, French
O'wlet. } and Scottish.] A bird that flies about in the night and catches mice.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing
For a charm. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Return to her!
No! rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shak.

'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray
Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd every bay;
Sick was the sun, the owl forsook his bow'r.
Dunciad.

Then lady Cynthia, mistress of the shade,
Goes, with the fashionable owls, to bed. Young.

O'wler. n. s. One who carries contraband goods: in the legal sense, one that caries out wool illicitly. Perhaps from the necessity of carrying on an illicit trade by night: but rather, I believe, a corruption of wooller, by a colloquial neglect of the w, such as is often observed in woman, and by which goodwife is changed to goody. Woollen, oollen, owler.

By running goods, these graceless owlers gain.
Swift.

We understand by some owlers, old people die in France. Tatler.

OWN. n. s. [agen, Saxon; eygen, Dutch.]

1. This is a word of no other use than as it is added to the possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, our, your, their. It seems to be a substantive; as, my own, my peculiar: but is, in reality, the participle of the verb owe, in the participle owen or own: my own: the thing owned by, or belonging to me.

Inachus in his cave alone,
Wept not another's losses, but his own. Dryden.

2. It is added generally by way of emphasis or corroboration.

I yet never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was my own. Shak.

Every nation made gods of their own, and put them in high places. 2. Kings xvii. 29.

For my own share one beauty I design,
Engage your honours that she shall be mine. Dr.

It is conceit rather than understanding, if it must be under the restraint of receiving and holding opinions by the authority of any thing but their own perceived evidence. Locke.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,
And knit thee gloves made of her own spun yarn. Gay.

Passion and pride were to her soul unknown.
Convinc'd that virtue only is our own. Pope.

3. Sometimes it is added to note opposition or contradistinction; domestick; not foreign; mine, his, or yours; not another's.

These toils abroad, these tumults with his own,
Fell in the revolution of one year. Daniel.

There's nothing sillier than a crafty knave outwitted, and beaten at his own play. L'Estrange.

To Own. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To acknowledge; to avow for one's own.

When you come, find me out,
And own me for your son. Dryden's Cleomenes.

2. To possess; to claim; to hold by right.

Tell me, ye Trojans, for that name you own;
Nor is your course upon our coasts unknown.
Dryden.

Others on earth o'er human race preside,
Of these the chief, the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the British throne.
Pope.

3. To avow.

Nor hath it been thus only amongst the more civilized nations; but the barbarous Indians likewise have owned that tradition. Wilkins.

I'll venture out alone,
Since you, fair princes, my protection own. Dry.

4. To confess; not to deny.

Make this truth so evident, that those who are unwilling to own it may yet be ashamed to deny it.
Tillotson.

Others will own their weakness of understanding.
Locke.

It must be owned, that, generally speaking, good parents are never more fond of their daughters, than when they see them too fond of themselves.
Law.

O'wnership. n. s. [from owner.] Property; rightful possession.

In a real action, the proximate cause is the property or ownership of the thing in controversy.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

O'wner. n. s. [from own.] One to whom any thing belongs; master; rightful possessor.

A bark
Stays but till her owner comes aboard. Shakesp.

Is it not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls in spight of me the owner,
But thou wilt brave me. Shakespeare.

Here shew favour, because it happeneth that the owner hath incurred the forfeiture of eight years profit of his lands, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process against him. Bacon.

They intend advantage of my labours,
With no small profit daily to my owners. Milton.

These wait the owners last despair,
And what's permitted to the flames invade. Dry.

A freehold, though but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison's Freeholder.

That small muscle draws the nose upwards, when it expresses the contempt which the owner of it has upon seeing any thing he does not like. Add.

Victory hath not made us insolent, nor have we taken advantage to gain any thing beyond the honour of restoring every one's right to their just owners. Atterbury.

What is this wit, which must our cares employ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy. Pope.

PA'LLET. n. ſ. [paillet, in Chaucer; which was probably the French word from paille, ſtraw, and ſecondarily, a bed.]

1. A ſmall bed; a mean bed.

Why rather, ſleep, lieſt thou in ſmoaky cribs,
Upon uneaſy pallets ſtretching thee,
And huſht with buzzing night flies to thy ſlumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of coſtly ſtate,
And lull'd with ſounds of ſweeteſt melody? Shak.

His ſecretary was laid in a pallet near him for ventilation of his thoughts. Wotton's Buckingham.

If your ſtray attendance be yet lodg'd,
Or ſhroud within theſe limits, I ſhall know,
Ere morrow wake, or the low-rooſted lark
From her thatch't pallet rouſe. Milton.

2. [palette, Fr.] A ſmall meaſure, formerly uſed by chirurgeons.

A ſurgeon drew from a patient in four days, twenty-ſeven pallets, every pallet containing three ounces. Hakewill.

Such bitter invectives againſt other mens faults, and indulgence or palliation of their own, ſhews their zeal lies in their ſpleen. Govern. of the Tongue.

2. Imperfect or temporary, not radical cure; mitigation, not cure.

If the juſt cure of a diſeaſe be full of peril, let the phyſician reſort to palliation. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

PA'LLIATIVE. adj. [palliatif, Fr. from palliate.]

1. Extenuating; favourably repreſentative.

2. Mitigating, not removing; temporarily or partially, not radically curative.

Conſumption pulmonary ſeldom admits of other than a palliative cure, and is generally incurable when hereditary. Arbuthnot.

PA'LLIATIVE. n. ſ. [from palliate.] Something mitigating; ſomething alleviating.

It were more ſafe to truſt to the general averſion of our people againſt this coin, than apply thoſe palliatives which weak, perfidious, or abject politicians adminiſter. Swift.

PA'LLID. adj. [pallidus, Lat.] Pale; not high-coloured; not bright: pallid is ſeldom uſed of the face.

Of every ſort, which in that meadow grew,
They gather'd ſome; the violet pallid blue. Spen.

When from the pallid ſky the ſun deſcends.
Thomſon.

Whilſt, on the margin of the beaten road,
Its pallid bloom ſick-ſmelling hen-bane ſhow'd.
Harte.

PALM. n. ſ. [palma, Latin; palmier, French.]

1. A tree of great variety of ſpecies; of which the branches were worn in token of victory: it therefore implies ſuperiority.

There are twenty-one ſpecies of this tree, of which the moſt remarkable are, the greater palm or date-tree. The dwarf palm grows in Spain, Portugal, and Italy, from whence the leaves are ſent hither and made into flag-brooms. The oily palm is a native of Guinea and Cape Verd iſland, but has been tranſplanted to Jamaica and Barbadoes. It grows as high as the main maſt of a ſhip. Miller.

Get the ſtart of the majeſtick world,
And bear the palm alone. Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

Nothing better proveth the excellency of this ſoil, than the abundant growing of the palm-trees without labour of man. This tree alone giveth unto man whatſoever his life beggeth at nature's hand. Raleigh.

Fruits of palm-tree, pleaſanteſt to thirſt
And hunger both. Milton.

Thou youngeſt virgin, daughter of the ſkies,
Whoſe palms new pluck'd from Paradiſe,
With ſpreading branches more ſublimely riſe.
Dryden.

2. Victory; triumph. [palme, Fr.]

Namur ſubdu'd is England's palm alone;
The reſt beſieg'd; but we conſtrain'd the town.
Dryden.

3. The hand ſpread out; the inner part of the hand. [palma, Latin.]

By this virgin palm now kiſſing thine,
I will be thine. Shakeſpeare.

Drinks of extreme thin parts fretting, put upon the back of our hand, will, with a little ſtay, paſs through to the palm, and yet taſte mild to the mouth. Bacon.

Seeking my ſucceſs in love to know,
I try'd th' infallible prophetick way,
A poppy-leaf upon my palm to lay. Dryden.

4. A hand, or meaſure of lengths compriſing three inches. [palme, French.]

The length of a foot is a ſixth part of the ſtature; a ſpan one eighth of it; a palm or hand's breadth one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth or inch one ſeventy-ſecond; a forefinger's breadth one ninety-ſixth. Holder on Time.

Henry VIII. of England, Francis I. of France, and Charles V. emperor, were ſo provident, as ſcarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either, but that the other two would ſet the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

The ſame hand into a fiſt may cloſe,
Which inſtantly a palm expanded ſhows. Den.

To PALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To conceal in the palm of the hand, as jugglers.

Palming is held foul play amongſt gameſters.
Dryden.

They palm'd the trick that loſt the game. Prior.

2. To impoſe by fraud.

If not by ſcriptures, how can we be ſure,
Reply'd the panther, what tradition's pure?
For you may palm upon us new for old. Dryden.

Moll White has made the country ring with ſeveral imaginary exploits palmed upon her. Addiſon.

3. To handle.

Frank carves very ill, yet will palm all the meat.
Prior.

4. To ſtroak with the hand. Ainſworth.

PA'LMER. n. ſ. [from palm.] A pilgrim: they who returned from the holy land carried branches of palm.

My ſceptre, for a palmer's walking ſtaff. Shak.

Behold yon iſle, by palmers, pilgrims trod,
Men bearded, bald, cowl'd, uncowl'd, ſhod, unſhod
Pope.

PA'LMERWORM. n. ſ. [palmer and worm.] A worm covered with hair, ſuppoſed to be ſo called becauſe he wanders over all plants.

A fleſh fly, and one of thoſe hairy worms that reſemble caterpillers, and are called palmerworms, being conveyed into one of our ſmall receivers, the bee and the fly lay with their bellies upward, and the worm ſeemed ſuddenly ſtruck dead. Boyle.

PALME'TTO. n. ſ. A ſpecies of the palm-tree: It grows in the Weſt-Indies to a very large tree; with the leaves the inhabitants thatch their houſes. Theſe leaves, before they are expanded, are cut and brought into England to make women's plaited hats; and the berries of theſe trees were formerly much uſed for buttons.

Broad o'er my head the verdant cedars wave,
And high palmettos lift their graceful ſhade. Thom.

PA'LMISTER. n. ſ. [from palma.] One who deals in palmiſtry. Diſt.

PA'LMISTRY. n. ſ. [palma, Latin.]

1. The cheat of foretelling fortune by the lines of the palm.

We ſhall not query what truth is in palmiſtry, or divination from lines of our hands of high denomination. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Here while his canting drone-pipe ſcan'd,
The myſtick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmiſtry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleaveland.

With the fond maids in palmiſtry he deals;
They tell the ſecret firſt which he reveals. Prior.

2. Addiſon uſes it humorouſly for the action of the hand.

Going to relieve a common beggar, he found his pocket was picked; that being a kind of palmiſtry at which theſe vermin are very dextrous.
Addiſon's Spectator.

PA'LMY. adj. [from palm.] Bearing palms.

In the moſt high and palmy ſtate of Rome,
A little ere the mightieſt Julius fell,
The graves ſtood tenantleſs. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

She paſs'd the region which Panchea join'd,

PALPABI'LITY. n. ſ. [from palpable.] Quality of being perceivable to the touch.

He firſt found out palpability of colours; and by the delicacy of his touch, could diſtinguiſh the different different vibrations of the heterogeneous rays of light. Mart. Scribleru.

PA'LPABLE. adj. [palpable, Fr. palpor, Lat.]

1. Perceptible by the touch.

Art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a falſe creation?
I ſee thee yet in form as palpable,
As this which now I draw. Shakeſ. Macbeth.

Darkneſs muſt overſhadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkneſs! and blot out three days. Milt.

2. Groſs; coarſe; eaſily detected.

That groſſer kind of heatheniſh idolatry, whereby they worſhipped the very works of their own hands, was an abſurdity to reaſon ſo palpable, that the prophet David comparing idols and idolaters together, maketh almoſt no odds between them. Hooker.

They grant we err not in a palpable manner, we are not openly and notoriouſly impious. Hooker.

He muſt not think to ſhelter himſelf from ſo palpable an abſurdity, by this impertinent diſtinction. Tillotſon.

Having no ſurer guide, it was no wonder that they fell into groſs and palpable miſtakes. Woodw.

3. Plain; eaſily perceptible.

That they all have ſo teſtified, I ſee not how we ſhould poſſibly wiſh a proof more palpable, than this manifeſtly received and every where continued cuſtom of reading them publickly. Hook.

They would no longer be content with the inviſible monarchy of God, and God diſmiſſed them to the palpable dominion of Saul. Holyday.

Since there is ſo much diſſimilitude between cauſe and effect in the more palpable phænomena, we can expect no leſs between them and their inviſible efficients. Glanville.

PA'LPABLENESS. n. ſ. [from palpable.] Quality of being palpable; plainneſs; groſſneſs.

PA'LPABLY. adv. [from palpable.]

With written pamphlets ſtudiouſly deviſ'd? Shakeſ.

I put forth a ſlight pamphlet about the elements of architecture. Wotton.

Since I have been reading many Engliſh pamphlets and tractates of the ſabbath, I can hardly find any treatiſe wherein the uſe of the common ſervice by the miniſter, and the due frequenting thereof by the people, is once named among the duties or offices of ſanctifying the Lord's-day. White.

He could not, without ſome tax upon himſelf and his miniſters for the not executing the laws, look upon the bold licence of ſome in printing pamphlets. Clarendon.

As when ſome writer in a publick cauſe,
His pen, to ſave a ſinking nation, draws,
While all is calm, his arguments prevail,
'Till pow'r diſcharging all her ſtormy bags,
Flutters the feeble pamphlet into rags. Swift.

To PA'MPHLET. v. n. [from the noun.] To write ſmall books.

I put pen to paper, and ſomething I have done, though in a poor pamphleting way. Howel.

So lines, that from their parallel decline,
More they proceed, the more they still disjoin. Garth.

4. Resemblance: conformity continued through many particulars; likeness.

Such a resemblance of all parts,
Life, death, age, fortune, nature, arts;
She lights her torch at theirs to tell,
And shew the world this parallel. Denham.

'Twixt earthly females and the moon,
All parralels exactly run. Swift's Miscellany.

5. Com-

5. Compariſon made.

The parallel holds in the gainleſneſs, as well as laborioufneſs of the work. Decay of Piety.

A reader cannot be more rationally entertained, than by comparing and drawing a parallel between his own private character, and that of other perſons. Addiſon.

6. Any thing reſembling another.

Thou ungrateful brute, if thou wouldſt find thy parallel, go to hell, which is both the region and the emblem of ingratitude. South's Sermons.

For works like theſe, let deathleſs journals tell,
None but thyſelf can be thy parallel. Pope.

To PA'RALLEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place, ſo as always to keep the ſame direction with another line.

The Azores having a middle ſituation between theſe continents and that vaſt tract of America, the needle ſeemeth equally diſtracted by both, and diverting unto neither, doth parallel and place itſelf upon the true meridian. Brown.

2. To keep in the ſame direction; to level.

The loyal ſufferers abroad became ſubjected to the worſt effect of baniſhment, and even there expelled and driven from their flights: ſo paralleling in their exigencies the moſt immediate objects of that monſter's fury. Fell.

His life is parallel'd
Ev'n with the ſtroke and line of his great juſtice. Shakeſpeare.

3. To correſpond to.

That he ſtretched out the north over the empty places, ſeems to parallel the expreſſion of David, he ſtretched out the earth upon the waters. Burnet.

4. To be equal to; to reſemble through many particulars.

In the fire, the deſtruction was ſo ſwift, ſudden, vaſt and miſerable, as nothing can parallel in ſtory. Dryden.

5. To compare.

I parallel'd more than once, our idea of ſubſtance, with the Indian philoſpher's he-knew-not-what, which ſupported the tortoiſe. Locke.

PARALLE'LISM. n. ſ. [parallelifme, Fr. from parallel.] State of being parallel.

The parallelifm and due proportionated inclination of the axis of the earth. More's Divine Dialogues.

Speaking of the parallelifm of the axis of the earth, I demand, whether it be better to have the axis of the earth ſteady and perpetually parallel to itſelf, or to have it careleſsly tumble this way and that way. Ray on the Creation.

PARALLE'LOGRAM. n. ſ. [παραλληλος and γραμμη; parallelograme, Fr.] In geometry, a right lined quadrilateral figure, whoſe oppoſite ſides are parallel and equal. Harris.

The experiment we made in a loadſtone of a parallelogram, or long figure, wherein only inverting the extremes, as it came out of the fire, we altered the poles. Brown.

We may have a clear idea of the area of a parallelogram, without knowing what relation it bears to the area of a triangle. Watts's Logick.

PARALLELOGRA'MICAL. adj. [from parallelogram.] Having the properties of a parallelogram.

PARALLELO'PIPED. n. ſ. [from parallelopipede, Fr.] A ſolid figure contained under ſix parallelograms, the oppoſites of which are equal and parallel; or it is a priſm, whoſe baſe is a parallelogram: it is always triple to a pyramid of the ſame baſe and height. Harris.

Two priſms alike in ſhape I tied ſo, that their axes and oppoſite ſides being parallel, they compoſed a parallelopiped. Newton's Opticks.

Cryſtals that hold lead are yelloviſh, and of a cubic or parallelopiped figure. Woodward.

PA'RALOGISM. n. ſ. [παραλογισμος; paralogiſme, Fr.] A falſe argument.

That becauſe they have not a bladder of gall, like thoſe we obſerve in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogiſm not admittable, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud, and needs not the ſun to ſcatter it. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Modern writers, making the drachma leſs than the denarius, others equal, have been deceived by a double paralogiſm, in ſtanding too nicely upon the bare words of the ancients, without examining the things. Arbuthnot.

If a ſyllogiſm agree with the rules given for the conſtruction of it, it is called a true argument; if it diſagree with theſe rules, it is a paralogiſm, or falſe argument. Watts.

PA'RALOGY. n. ſ. Falſe reaſoning.

That Methuſelah was the longeſt liver of all the poſterity of Adam, we quietly believe; but that he muſt needs be ſo, is perhaps below paralogy to deny. Brown.

PA'RALYSIS. [παραλυσις; paralyſie, Fr.] A palſy.

PARALY'TICAL. } adj. [from paralyſis; paraly-
PARALY'TICK. } tique, Fr.] Palſied; inclined to palſy.

Nought ſhall it profit, that the charming fair,
Angelic, ſofteſt work of heav'n, draws near
To the cold ſhaking paralytick hand,
Senſeleſs of beauty. Prior.

If a nerve be cut, or ſtreightly bound, that goes to any muſcle, that muſcle ſhall immediately loſe its motion; which is the caſe of paralyticks. Derham.

The difficulties of breathing and ſwallowing, without any tumour after long diſeaſes, proceed commonly from a reſolution or paralytical diſpoſition of the parts. Arbuthnot.

PARA'METER. n. ſ. The latus rectum of a parabola, is a third proportional to the abſciſſa and any ordinate; ſo that the ſquare of the ordinate is always equal to the rectangle under the parameter and abſciſſa: but, in the ellipſis and hyperbola, it has a different proportion. Harris.

PARAMO'UNT. adj. [per and mount.]

1. Superiour; having the higheſt juriſdiction: as lord paramount, the chief of the ſeigniory: with to.

Leagues within the ſtate are ever pernicious to monarchies; for they raiſe an obligation, paramount to obligation of ſovereignty, and make the king, tanquam unus ex nobis. Bacon.

The dogmatiſt's opinion aſſurance is paramount to argument. Glanville.

If all power be derived from Adam, by divine inſtitution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government; and therefore the poſitive laws of men cannot determine that which is itſelf the foundation of all law. Locke.

Mankind, ſeeing the apoſtles poſſeſſed of a power plainly paramount to the powers of all the known beings, whether angels or dæmons, could not queſtion their being inſpired by God. Weſt.

2. Eminent; of the higheſt order.

John a Chamber was hanged upon a gibbet raiſed a ſtage higher in the midſt of a ſquare gallows, as a traitor paramount; and a number of his chief accomplices were hanged upon the lower ſtory round him. Bacon.

PARAPHERNA'LIA. n. ſ. [Lat. paraphernaux, Fr.] Goods in the wife's diſpoſal.

PA'RAPHRASE. n. ſ. [παραφρασις; paraphraſe, Fr.] A looſe interpretation; an explanation in many words.

All the laws of nations were but a paraphraſe upon this ſtanding rectitude of nature, that was ready to enlarge itſelf into ſuitable determinations, upon all emergent objects and occaſions. South.

In paraphraſe, or tranſlation with latitude, the author's words are not ſo ſtrictly followed as his ſenſe, and that too amplified, but not altered: ſuch is Mr. Waller's tranſlation of Virgil's fourth Æneid. Dryden.

To PA'RAPHRASE. v. a. [paraphraſer, French; παραφραζω.] To interpret with laxity of expreſſion; to tranſlate looſely.

We are put to conſtrue and paraphraſe our own words, to free ourſelves from the ignorance and malice of our adverſaries. Stillingfleet.

What needs he paraphraſe on what we mean,
We were at worſt but wanton; he's obſcene. Dryden.

Where tranſlation is impracticable, they may paraphraſe.—But it is intolerable, that, under a pretence of paraphraſing and tranſlating, a way ſhould be ſuffered of treating authors to a manifeſt diſadvantage. Felton on the Claſſicks.

PA'RAPHRAST. n. ſ. [paraphraſte, Fr. παραφραστης.] A lax interpreter; one who explains in many words.

The fitteſt for publick audience are ſuch, as following a middle courſe between the rigor of literal tranſlators and the liberty of paraphraſts, do, with great ſhortneſs and plainneſs deliver the meaning. Hooker.

The Chaldean paraphraſt renders Gerah by Meath. Arbuthnot.

PARAPHRA'STICAL. } adj. [from paraphraſe.]
PARAPHRA'STIC. } Lax in interpretation; not literal; not verbal.

PARAPHRENI'TIS. n. ſ. [παρα and φρενιτις; paraphrenſie, Fr.]

Paraphrenitis is an inflammation of the diaphragm. The ſymptoms are a violent fever, a moſt exquiſite pain increaſed upon inſpiration, by which it is diſtinguiſhed from a pleuriſy, in which the greateſt pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot.

PARAQUE'TO. n. ſ. A little parrot.

PA'RASANG. n. ſ. [paraſanga.] A Perſian meaſure of length.

Since the mind is not able to frame an idea of any ſpace without parts, inſtead thereof it makes uſe of the common meaſures, which, by familiar uſe, in each country, have imprinted themſelves on the memory; as inches and feet, or cubits and paraſangs. Locke.

PA'RASITE. n. ſ. [paraſite, Fr. paraſita, Lat.] One that frequents rich tables, and earns his welcome by flattery.

He is a flatterer,
A paraſite, a keeper back of death,
Who gently would diſſolve the bands of life,
Which falſe hopes linger, Shakeſpeare.

Moſt ſmiling, ſmooth, deteſted paraſites,
Courteous deſtroyers, affable wolves, meek bears,
You fools of fortune. - Shakeſpeare.

Diogenes, when mice came about him, as he was eating, ſaid, I ſee, that even Diogenes nouriſheth paraſites. Bacon.

Thou, with trembling fear,
Or like a fawning paraſite, obey'd;
Then to thyſelf aſcrib'ſt the truth foretold. Milt.

The people ſweat not for their king's delight,
T' enrich a pimp, or raiſe a paraſite. Dryden.

PARASI'TICAL. } adj. [paraſitique, Fr. from PARASI'TIC. } paraſite.] Flattering; wheedling.

The biſhop received ſmall thanks for his paraſitick preſentation. Hakewill on Providence.

Some paraſitick preachers have dared to call thoſe martyrs, who died fighting againſt me. King Charles.

PA'RCEL. n. ſ. [parcelle, French; particula, Latin.]

1. A ſmall bundle.
2. A part of the whole; part taken ſeparately.

Women, Silvius, had they mark'd him
In parcels, as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him. Shakeſpeare.

I drew from her a prayer of earneſt heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage delate;
Whereof by parcels ſhe had ſomething heard,
But not diſtinctively. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

An inventory thus importing,
The ſeveral parcels of his plate, his treaſure,
Rich ſtuffs and ornaments of houſhold. Shakeſp.

With what face could ſuch a great man have begged ſuch a parcel of the crown lands, one a vaſt ſum of money, another the forfeited eſtate? Davenant.

I have known penſions given to particular perſons, any one of which, if divided into ſmaller parcels, and diſtributed to thoſe who diſtinguiſh themſelves by wit or learning, would anſwer the end. Swift.

The ſame experiments ſucceed on two parcels of the white of an egg, only it grows ſomewhat thicker upon mixing with an acid. Arbuthnot.

3. A quantity or maſs.

What can be rationally conceived in ſo tranſparent a ſubſtance as water for the production of theſe colours, beſides the various ſizes of its fluid and globular parcels. Newton.

4. A number of perſons: in contempt.

This youthful parcel
Of noble batchelors ſtand at my beſtowing. Sh.

5. Any number or quantity: in contempt.

They came to this concluſion; that, unleſs they could, by a parcel of fair words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. L'Eſtrange.

To PA'RCEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out ſeveral perfections to ſeveral deities, do they not, by this, aſſert contradictions, making deity only to ſuch a meaſure perfect? whereas a deity implies perfection beyond all meaſure. South.

Thoſe ghoſtly kings would parcel out my pow'r,
And all the fatneſs of my land devour. Dryden.

2. To make up into a maſs.

What a wounding ſhame, that mine own ſervant ſhould parcel the ſum of my diſgraces by addition of his envy! Shakeſpeare.

PA'RCENER. n. ſ. [In common law.] When one dies poſſeſſed of an eſtate, and having iſſue only daughters, or his ſiſters be his heirs; ſo that the lands deſcend to thoſe daughters or ſiſters: theſe are called parceners, and are but as one heir. Dict.

PA'RCENARY. n. ſ. [from parſonier, Fr.] A holding or occupying of land by more perſons pro indiviſo, or by joint tenants, otherwiſe called coparceners: for if they refuſe to divide their common inheritance, and chuſe rather to hold it jointly, they are ſaid to hold in parcinarie. Cowel.

To PARCH. v. a. [from περκάω, ſays Junius; from percoquo, ſays Skinner; neither of them ſeem ſatisfied with their conjecture: perhaps from peruſtus, burnt, to peruſt, to parch; perhaps from parchment, the effect of fire upon parchment being almoſt proverbial.] To burn ſlightly and ſuperficially; to ſcorch; to dry up.

Hath thy fiery heart ſo parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall? Shakeſpeare.

Did he ſo often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and ſummer's parching heat,
To conquer France? Shakeſpeare's Hen. IV.

Torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air aduſt,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton.

I'm ſtupify'd with ſorrow, paſt relief
Of tears; parch'd up and wither'd with my grief. Dryden.

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemiſphere would be condemned to perpetual cold and darkneſs, the other continually roaſted and parched by the ſun beams. Ray.

The Syrian ſtar
With his ſultry breath infects the ſky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heav'ns above us fry. Dryden.

Full fifty years
I have endur'd the biting winter's blaſt,
And the ſeverer heats of parching ſummer. Rowe.

The ſkin grows parched and dry, and the whole body lean and meagre. Blackmore.

A man diſtreſſed with thirſt in the parched places of the wilderneſs, ſearches every pit, but finds no water. Rogers.

To PARCH. v. n. To be ſcorched.

We were better parch in Africk ſun,
Than in the pride and falt ſcorn of his eyes. Sh.

If to prevent the acroſpiring, it be thrown thin, many corns will dry and parch into barley. Mortim.

PA'RCHMENT. n. ſ. [parchemin, French; pergamena, Latin.] Skins dreſſed for the writer. Among traders, the ſkins of ſheep are called parchment, thoſe of calves vellum.

Is not this a lamentable thing, that the ſkin of an innocent lamb ſhould be made parchment; that parchment, being ſcribbled o'er, ſhould undo a man? Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

In the coffin, that had the books, they were found as freſh as if newly written, being written in parchment, and covered with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Like flying ſhades before the clouds we ſhew,
We ſhrink like parchment in conſuming flame. Dry.

PA'RCHMENT-MAKER. n. ſ. [parchment and maker.] He who dreſſes parchment.

PARD. } n. ſ. [pardus, pardalis, Latin.] The PA'RDALE. } leopard; in poetry, any of the ſpotted beaſts.

The pardale ſwift, and the tyger cruel. Spenſer.

As fox to lambs, as wolf to heifer's calf;
As pard to the hind, or ſtep-dame to her ſon. Shakeſpeare.

Ten brace of grey-hounds, ſnowy fair,
And tall as ſtags, ran looſe, and cours'd around his chair,
A match for pards in flight, in grappling for the bear. Dryden.

To PA'RDON. v. a. [pardonner, French.]

1. To excuſe an offender.

When I beheld you in Cilicia,
An enemy to Rome, I pardon'd you. Dryden.

I will pardon all their iniquities. Jeremiah

Forgiveneſs to the injur'd does belong,
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

3. To remit a penalty.

That thou may'ſt ſee the diff'rence of our ſpirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou aſk it. Shakeſp.

4. Pardon me, is a word of civil denial, or ſlight apology.

Sir, pardon me, it is a letter from my brother. Sh.

PA'RDON. n. ſ. [pardon, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Forgiveneſs of an offender.
2. Forgiveneſs of a crime.

He that pleaſeth great men, ſhall get pardon for iniquity. Eccluſ. xx. 27.

A ſlight pamphlet, about the elements of architecture, hath been entertained with ſome pardon among my friends. Wotton.

But infinite in pardon is my judge. Milton.

What better can we do than proſtrate fall
Before him reverent, and there confeſs
Humbly our faults, and pardon beg, with tears,
Wat'ring the ground? Milton.

There might you ſee
Indulgencies, diſpenſes, pardons, bulls,
The ſport of winds. Milton.

3. Remiſſion of penalty.
4. Forgiveneſs received.

A man may be ſafe as to his condition, but, in the mean time, dark and doubtful as to his apprehenſions: ſecure in his pardon, but miſerable in the ignorance of it; and ſo paſſing all his days in the diſconſolate, uneaſy viciſſitude of hopes and fears, at length go out of the world, not knowing whither he goes. South's Sermons.

5. Warrant of forgiveneſs, or exemption from puniſhment.

The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never ſee his pardon. Shakeſpeare.

PA'RDONABLE. adj. [pardonable, Fr. from pardon.] Venial; excuſable.

That which we do being evil, is notwithſtanding by ſo much more pardonable, by how much the exigencies of ſo doing, or the difficulty of doing otherwiſe, is greater, unleſs this neceſſity or difficulty have originally riſen from ourſelves. Hooker.

A blind man ſitting in the chimney-corner is pardonable enough, but ſitting at the helm, he is intollerable. South.

What Engliſh readers, unacquainted with Greek or Latin, will believe me, when we confeſs we derive all that is pardonable in us from ancient fountains? Dryden.

PA'RDONABLENESS. n. ſ. [from pardonable.] Venialneſs; ſuſceptibility of pardon.

Saint John's word is, all ſin is tranſgreſſion of the law; Saint Paul's, the wages of ſin is death: put theſe two together, and this conceit of the natural pardonableneſs of ſin vaniſhes away. Hall.

PA'RDONABLY. adv. [from pardonable.] Venially; excuſably.

I may judge when I write more or leſs pardonably. Dryden.

PA'RDONER. n. ſ. [from pardon.]

1. One who forgives another.

This is his pardon, purchas'd by ſuch ſin,
For which the pardoner himſelf is in. Shakeſpeare.

2. One of the fellows that carried about the pope's indulgencies, and ſold them to ſuch as would buy them, againſt whom Luther incenſed the people of Germany. Cowel.

To PARE. v. a. [This word is reaſonably deduced by Skinner from the French phraſe, parer les ongles, to dreſs the horſes hoofs when they are ſhaved by the farrier: thus we firſt ſaid, pare your nails; and from thence transferred the word to general uſe.] To cut off extremities of the ſurface; to cut away by little and little; to diminiſh. If pare be uſed before the thing diminiſhed, it is followed immediately by its accuſative; if it precedes the thing taken away, or agrees in the paſſive voice with the thing taken away, as a nominative, it then requires a particle, as, away, off.

The creed of Athanaſius, and that ſacred hymn of glory, than which nothing doth ſound more heavenly heavenly in the ears of faithful men, are now reckoned as superfluities, which we muſt in any caſe pare away, leſt we cloy God with too much ſervice. Hooker.

I have not alone
Imploy'd you where high profits might come home;
But par'd my preſent havings to beſtow
My bounties upon you. Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.

I am a man, whom fortune hath cruelly ſcratch'd.
—'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Shakeſpeare.

The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely paws all par'd away. Shak.

The king began to pare a little the privilege of the clergy, ordaining that clerks convict ſhould be burned in the hand. Bacon's Henry VII.

Pick out of tales the mirth, but not the ſin,
He pares his apple, that will cleanly feed. Herbert.

Whoever will partake of God's ſecrets, muſt firſt look into his own, he muſt pare off whatſoever is amiſs, and not without holineſs approach to the holieſt of all holies. Taylor.

All the mountains were pared off the earth, and the ſurface of it lay even, or in an equal convexity every where with the ſurface of the ſea. Burnet.

The moſt poetical parts, which are deſcription and images, were to be pared away, when the body was ſwollen into too large a bulk for the repreſentation of the ſtage. Dryden.

The ſword, as it was juſtly drawn by us, ſo can it ſcarce ſafely be ſheathed, 'till the power of the great troubler of our peace be ſo far pared and reduced, as that we may be under no apprehenſions. Atterbury.

'Twere well if ſhe would pare her nails. Pope.

PAREGO'RICK. adj. [παρηγορικὸς.] Having the power in medicine to comfort, mollify and aſſuage. Dict.

PA'RISH. n. ſ. [paroecia, low Lat. paroiſſe, Fr. of the Greek παροικία, i. e. accolarum conventus, accolatus, ſacra vicinia.] The particular charge of a ſecular prieſt. Every church is either cathedral, conventual, or parochial: cathedral is that where there is a biſhop ſeated, ſo called a cathedra: conventual conſiſts of regular clerks, profeſſing ſome order of religion, or of a dean and chapter, or other college of ſpiritual men: parochial is that which is inſtituted for ſaying divine ſervice, and adminiſtring the holy ſacraments to the people, dwelling within a certain compaſs of ground near unto it. Our realm was firſt divided into pariſhes by Honorius, archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 636. Cowel.

Dametas came piping and dancing, the merrieſt man in a pariſh. Sidney.

By the Catholick church is meant no more than the common church, into which all ſuch perſons as belonged to that pariſh, in which it was built, were wont to congregate. Pearſon.

The tythes, his pariſh freely paid, he took;
But never ſu'd, or curs'd with bell or book. Dryden.

PA'RISH. adj.

1. Belonging to the pariſh; having the care of the pariſh.

A pariſh prieſt was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend and religious man. Dryden.

Not pariſh clerk, who calls the pſalms ſo clear. Gay.

PA'RITY. n. ſ. [parité, Fr. paritas, Lat.] Equality; reſemblance.

We may here juſtly tax the diſhoneſty and ſhamefulneſs of the mouths, who have upbraided us with the opinion of a certain ſtoical parity of ſins. Holl.

That Chriſt or his apoſtles ever commanded to ſet up ſuch a parity of preſbyters, and in ſuch a way as thoſe Scots endeavour, I think is not very diſputable. King Charles.

Survey the total ſet of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of progreſſion, obſerve an equality of length and parity of numeration; not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one ſide not exactly anſwered by the other. Brown.

Thoſe accidental occurrences, which excited Socrates to the diſcovery of ſuch an invention, might fall in with that man that is of a perfect parity with Socrates. Hale.

Their agreement, in eſſential characters, makes rather an identity than a parity. Glanville.

Women could not live in that parity and equality of expence with their huſbands, as now they do. Graunt.

By an exact parity of reaſon, we may argue, if a man has no ſenſe of thoſe kindneſſes that paſs upon him, from one like himſelf, whom he ſees and knows, how much leſs ſhall his heart be affected with the grateful ſenſe of his favours, whom he converſes with only by imperfect ſpeculations, by the diſcourſes of reaſon, or the diſcoveries of faith? South.

PARK. n. ſ. [peapruc, Sax. parc, French.] A piece of ground incloſed and ſtored with wild beaſts of chaſe, which a man may have by preſcription ſcription or the king's grant. Manwood, in his foreſt law, defines it thus: a park is a place for privilege for wild beaſts of venery, and alſo for other wild beaſts that are beaſts of the foreſt and of the chaſe: and thoſe wild beaſts are to have a firm peace and protection there, ſo that no man may hurt or chaſe them within the park, without licenſe of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chaſe or a warren; for a park muſt be incloſed, and may not lie open; if it does, it is a good cauſe of ſeizure into the king's hands: and the owner cannot have action againſt ſuch as hunt in his park, if it lies open. Cowel.

We have parks and incloſures of all ſorts of beaſts and birds, which we uſe not only for view or rareneſs, but likewiſe for diſſections and trials. Bacon.

To PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To incloſe as in a park.

How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?
A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakeſpeare.

PA'RKER. n. ſ. [from park.] A park-keeper. Ainſworth.

PA'RKLEAVES. n. ſ. An herb. Ainſworth.

PARLE. n. ſ. [from parler, French.] Converſation; talk; oral treaty; oral diſcuſſion of any thing.

Of all the gentlemen,
That every day with parle encounter me,
In thy opinion, which is worthieſt love? Shakeſp.

Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. Shakeſpeare.

The biſhop, by a parle, is, with a ſhow
Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.

Why meet we thus, like wrangling advocates,
To urge the juſtice of our cauſe with words?
I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we muſt meet,
Give me my arms. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.

To PA'RLEY. v. n. [from parler, French.] To treat by word of mouth; to talk; to diſcuſs any thing orally. It is much uſed in war for a meeting of enemies to talk.

A Turk deſired the captain to ſend ſome, with whom they might more conveniently parley. Knolles's Hiſtory.

He parleys with her a while, as imagining ſhe would adviſe him to proceed. Broome.

PA'RLEY. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; diſcuſſion by word of mouth.

Seek rather by parley to recover them, than by the ſword. Sidney.

Well, by my will, we ſhall admit no parley:
A rotten caſe abides no handling. Shakeſpeare.

Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shak.

Let us reſolve never to have any parley with our luſts, but to make ſome conſiderable progreſs in our repentance. Calamy.

Parley and holding intelligence with guilt in the moſt trivial things, he pronounced as treaſon to ourſelves, as well as unto God. Fell.

No gentle means could be eſſay'd;
'Twas beyond parley when the ſiege was laid. Dry.

Force never yet a generous heart did gain;
We yield on parley, but are ſtorm'd in vain. Dryd.

Yet when ſome better fated youth
Shall with his am'rous parley move thee,
Reflect one moment on his truth,
Who, dying thus, perſiſts to love thee. Prior.

PA'RLIAMENT. n. ſ. [parliamentum, low Latin; parlement, French.] In England, is the aſſembly of the king and three eſtates of the realm; namely, the lords ſpiritual, the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the commonwealth, eſpecially the making and correcting of laws; which aſſembly or court is, of all others, the higheſt, and of greateſt authority. Cowel.

The king is fled to London,
To call a preſent court of parliament. Shakeſpeare.

Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,
To make a ſhambles of the parliament houſe. Shak.

The true uſe of parliaments is very excellent; and he often called, and continued as long as is neceſſary. Bacon

I thought the right way of parliaments the moſt ſafe for my crown, as beſt pleaſing to my people. King Charles.

Theſe are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial ſtood for parliament men, we know who would carry it. Dryden

PARLIAME'NTARY. adj. [from parliament.] Enacted by parliament; pertaining to parliament.

To the three firſt titles of the two houſes, or lines, and conqueſt, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.

Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or conſtitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons. Hale.

Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary ſecurity, I think to be dangerous and illegal. Swift.

PA'RLOUR. n. ſ. [parloir, French; parlatorio, Italian.]

1. A room in monaſteries, where the religious meet and converſe.

2. A room in houſes on the firſt floor, elegantly furniſhed for reception or entertainment.

Can we judge it a thing ſeemly for a man to go about the building of an houſe to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own uſe? Hooker.

Back again fair Alma led them right,
And ſoon into a goodly parlour brought. Spenſer.

It would be infinitely more ſhameful, in the dreſs of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.

Roof and ſides were like a parlour made
A ſoft receſs, and a cool ſummer ſhade. Dryden.

The firſt, forgive my verſe if too diffuſe,
Perform'd the kitchen's and the parlour's uſe;
The ſecond, better bolted and immur'd,
From wolves his out-door family ſecur'd. Harte.

PA'RLOUS. adj. [This might ſeem to come from parler, Fr. to ſpeak; but Junius derives it, I think, rightly, from perilous, in which ſenſe it anſwers to the Latin improbus.] Keen; ſprightly; waggiſh.

Midas durſt communicate
To none but to his wife his ears of ſtate;
One muſt be truſted, and he thought her fit,
As paſſing prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.

PA'RLOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from parlous.] Quickneſs; keenneſs of temper.

PA'ROTID. adj. [parotide, Fr. παρωτίς, παρὰ and οὖς.] Salivary; ſo named becauſe near the ears.

Beaſts and birds, having one common uſe of ſpittle, are furniſhed with the parotid glands, which help to ſupply the mouth with it. Grew.

PA'ROTIS. n. ſ. [παρωτίς.] A tumour in the glandules behind and about the ears, generally called the emunctories of the brain; though, indeed, they are the external fountains of the ſaliva of the mouth. Wiſeman.

PA'ROXYSM. n. ſ. [παροξυσμος; paroxyſme, Fr.] A fit; periodical exacerbation of a diſeaſe.

I fancied to myſelf a kind of eaſe, in the change of the paroxyſm. Dryden.

Amorous girls, through the fury of an hyſterick paroxyſm, are caſt into a trance for an hour. Harvey.

The greater diſtance of time there is between the paroxyſms, the fever is leſs dangerous, but more obſtinate. Arbuthnot.

PA'RRICIDE. n. ſ. [parricide, French; parricida, Latin.]

1. One who deſtroys his father.

I told him the revenging gods
'Gainſt parricides did all the thunder bend;
Spoke with how manifold and ſtrong a bond
The child was bound to th' father. Shakeſpeare.

2. One who deſtroys or invades any to whom he owes particular reverence: as his country or patron.

3. [Parricide, Fr. parricidium, Lat.] The murder of a father; murder of one to whom reverence is due.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and likewiſe a good law-maker; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon.

Morat was always bloody, now he's baſe;
And has ſo far in uſurpation gone,
He will by parricide ſecure the throne. Dryden.

PARRICI'DAL. } adj. [from parricida, Latin.]
PARRICI'DIOUS. } Relating to parricide; committing parricide.

Like John a dreams, unpregnant of my cauſe. Sh.

The peaking cornuto her huſband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealouſy, comes me in the inſtant of our encounter. Shakeſpeare.

PEAL. n. ſ. [Perhaps from pello, pellere, tympana.]

1. A ſucceſſion of loud ſounds: as, of bells, thunder, cannon, loud inſtruments.

They were ſaluted by the way, with a fair peal of artillery from the tower. Hayward.

The breach of faith cannot be ſo highly expreſſed, as in that it ſhall be the laſt peal to call the judgments of God upon men. Bacon's Eſſays.

Woods of oranges will ſmell into the ſea perhaps twenty miles; but what is that, ſince a peal of ordnance will do as much, which moveth in a ſmall compaſs. Bacon.

A peal ſhall rouſe their ſleep;
Then all the ſaints aſſembled, thou ſhalt judge
Bad men and angels. Milton's Paradiſe Regained.

I myſelf,
Vanquiſh'd with a peal of words, O weakneſs!
Gave up my fort of ſilence to a woman. Milton.

From

From the Moors camp the noiſe grows louder ſtill;
Peals of ſhouts that rend the heav'ns. Dryden.
Oh! for a peal of thunder that would make
Earth, ſea and air, and heaven and Cato tremble! Addiſon.

Ere to black Hecat's ſummons
The ſhard-born beetle with his drowſy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there ſhall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

To PEAL. v. n [from the noun.] To play ſolemnly and loud.

Let the pealing organ blow,
To the full-voic'd quire below,
In ſervice high and anthems clear,
As may with ſweetneſs through mine ear,
Diſſolve me into extaſies,
And bring all heav'n before mine eyes. Milton.
The pealing organ, and the pauſing choir;
And the laſt words, that duſt to duſt convey'd. Tickel.

To PEAL. v. a.

1. To aſſail with noiſe.

Nor was his ear leſs peal'd
With noiſes loud and ruinous, than when Bellona ſtorms,
With all her batt'ring engines, bent to raiſe
Some capital city. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

2. To ſtir with ſome agitation: as, to peal the pot, is when it boils to ſtir the liquor therein with a ladle. Ainſworth.

Both ill to the maiſter and worſe to ſome ground. Tuſſer.

As 'tis a peeler of land, ſow it upon lands that are rank. Mortimer.

To PEEP. v. n. [This word has no etymology, except that of Skinner, who derives it from opheſſen, Dutch, to lift up; and of Caſaubon, who derives it from ὀπτάνομαι, a ſpy; perhaps it may come from pip, pipio, Latin, to cry as young birds: when the chickens firſt broke the ſhell and cried, they were ſaid to begin to pip or peep; and the word that expreſſed the act of crying, was by miſtake applied to the act of appearing that was at the ſame time: this is offered till ſomething better may be found.]

1. To make the firſt appearance.

She her gay painted plumes diſordered,
Seeing a laſt herſelf from danger rid,
Peeps forth and ſoon renews her native pride. Spen.

Your youth
And the true blood, which peeps forth fairly through it,
Do plainly give you out an unſtain'd ſhepherd. Sh.

England and France might through their amity,
Breed him ſome prejudice; for from this league,
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakeſpeare.

I can ſee his pride
Peep through each part of him. Shakeſpeare.

The tim'rous maiden-bloſſoms on each bough
Peept forth from their firſt bluſhes; ſo that now
A thouſand ruddy hopes ſmil'd in each bud,
And flatter'd every greedy eye that ſtood. Crashaw.

With words not hers, and more than human ſound,
She makes th' obedient ghoſts peep trembling through the ground. Roſcommon.

Earth, but not at once, her viſage rears,
And peeps upon the ſeas from upper grounds. Dry.

Fair as the face of nature did appear,
When flowers firſt peep'd, and trees did bloſſoms bear,
And winter had not yet deform'd th' inverted year. Dryden.

Printing and letters had juſt peeped abroad in the world; and the reſtorers of learning wrote very eagerly againſt one another. Atterbury.

Though but the very white end of the ſprout peep out in the outward part of the couch, break it open, you will find the ſprout of a greater largeneſs. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

So pleas'd at firſt the tow'ring Alps we try,
And the firſt clouds and mountains ſeem the laſt;
But thoſe attain'd, we tremble to ſurvey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;
Th' increaſing proſpect tires our wand'ring eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps ariſe. Pope.

Moſt ſouls but peep out once an age,
Dull ſullen priſ'ners in the body's cage. Pope.

2. To look ſlily, cloſely or curiouſly; to look through any crevice.

Who is the ſame, which at my window peeps.

Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold. Shakſp. Macbeth.

Nature hath fram'd ſtrange fellows in her time;
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakeſpeare.

A fool will peep in at the door. Eccluſ. xxi. 23.

The trembling leaves through which he play'd,
Dappling the walk with light and ſhade,
Like lattice-windows give the ſpy
Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleaveland.

All doors are ſhut, no ſervant peeps abroad,
While others outward went on quick diſpatch. Dryden.

The daring flames peept in, and ſaw from far
The awful beauties of the ſacred quire;
But ſince it was prophan'd by civil war,
Heav'n thought it fit to have it purg'd by fire. Dry.

From each tree
The feather'd people look down to peep on me. Dryden.

Thoſe remote and vaſt bodies were formed not merely to be peeps at through an optick plaſs. Bentley's Sermons.

To tell the people in what danger he was. B. J.

2. To look narrowly; to peep.

Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer,
Now bolt and cudgel ſquirrels leap do move,
Now the ambitious lark with mirrour clear
They catch, while he, fool! to himſelf makes love. Sidney.

Hell itſelf will paſs away,
And leave her dolorous manſion to the peering day. Milton.

Peering in maps for ports, and piers, and roads,
And every object that might make me fear
Misfortune to my ventures. Shakeſpeare.

PEE'RAGE. n. ſ. [pairie, Fr. from peer.]

1. The dignity of a peer.

His friendſhips he to few confin'd;
No fools of rank or mongrel breed,
Who fain would paſs for Lords indeed;
Where titles give no right or power,
And peerage is a wither'd flower. Swift.

2. The body of peers.

Not only the penal laws are in force againſt papiſts, and their number is contemptible, but alſo the peerage and commons are excluded from parliament. Dryden.

PEE'RDOM. n. ſ. [from peer.] Peerage. Ainſ.

PEE'RESS. n. ſ. [female of peer.] The lady of a peer; a woman ennobled.

I bind,
On pain of puniſhment, the world to weet,
We ſtand up peerleſs. Shakeſpeare.

Her peerleſs feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a king. Shakeſp.

Heſperus, that led
The ſtarry hoſt, rode brighteſt; till the moon,
Riſing in cloudy majeſty, at length,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerleſs light. Milt.

Such muſick worthieſt were to blaze
The peerleſs light of her immortal praiſe,
Whoſe luſtre leads us. Milton.

Her dreſs, her ſhape, her matchleſs grace,
Were all obſerv'd, as well as heav'nly face;
With ſuch a peerleſs majeſty ſhe ſtands,
As in that day ſhe took the crown. Dryden.

PEE'RLESSNESS. n. ſ. [from peerleſs.] Univerſal ſuperiority.

PEE'VISH. adj. [This word Junius, with more reaſon than he commonly diſcovers, ſuppoſes to be formed by corruption from perverſe; Skinner rather derives it from beciſh, as we ſay waſpiſh.]

1. Petulant; waſpiſh; eaſily offended; irritable; iraſcible; ſoon angry; perverſe; moroſe; querulous; full of expreſſions of diſcontent; hard to pleaſe.

She is peeviſh, ſullen, froward,
Proud, diſobedient, ſtubborn, lacking duty. Sh.

If thou haſt the metal of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peeviſh town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, againſt theſe ſaucy walls. Shak.

Neither will it be ſatire or peeviſh invective to affirm, that infidelity and vice are not much diminiſhed. Swift

2. Expreſſing diſcontent or fretfulneſs.

For what can breed more peeviſh incongruities,
Than man to yield to female lamentations. Sidn.

I will not preſume
To ſend ſuch peeviſh tokens to a king. Shakeſp.

The pegs that make this muſick. Shak. Othello.

3. To take a PEG lower; to depreſs; to ſink: perhaps from relaxing the cords of muſical inſtruments.

Remember how in arms and politicks,
We ſtill have worſted all your holy tricks,
Trepann'd your party with intrigue,
And took your grandees down a peg. Hudibras.

4. The nick-name of Margaret.

To PEG. v. a. To faſten with a peg.

I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till
Thou'ſt howl'd away twelve winters. Shakeſp.

Taking the ſhoots of the paſt ſpring, and pegging them down in very rich earth, by that time twelvemonth they will be ready to remove. Evelyn.

PELF. n. ſ. [In low Latin, pelfra, not known whence derived; peuſſe, in Norman, is frippery.] Money; riches.

The thought of this doth paſs all worldly pelf. Sidney.

Hardy elf,
Thou dareſt view my direful countenance,
I read thee raſh and heedleſs of thyſelf,
To trouble my ſtill ſeat and heaps of precious pelf. Spenſer.

Of traffick or return ſhe never taketh care;
Not provident of pelf, as many iſlands are. Drayt.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf;
I pray for no man but myſelf. Shakeſpeare.

He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of pelf
Soon ſplit him on the former ſhelf:
He put it out again. Dryden's Horace.

To the poor if he refus'd his pelf,
He us'd them full as kindly as himſelf. Swift.

PE'LICAN. n. ſ. [pelicanus, low Latin; pelican, French.]

There are two ſorts of pelicans; one lives upon the water and feeds upon fiſh; the other keeps in deſerts, and feeds upon ſerpents and other reptiles: the pelican has a peculiar tenderneſs for its young; it generally places its neſt upon a craggy rock: the pelican is ſuppoſed to admit its young to ſuck blood from its breaſt. Calmet.

Should diſcarded fathers
Have this little mercy on their fleſh;
'Twas this fleſh begot thoſe pelican daughters. Sh.

The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, like the ſlice of apothecaries. Hakewill on Providence.

PE'LLET. n. ſ. [from pila, Lat. pelote, Fr.]

1. A little ball.

To PELT. v. a. [polteren, German, Skinner; contracted from pellet, Mr. Lye.]

1. To strike with something thrown. It is generally used of something thrown, rather with teazing frequency than destructive violence.

Poor naked wretches whereso'er you are
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness defend you? Shakespeare.

Do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds. Shakespeare.

No zealous brother there would want a stone
To maul us cardinals, and pelt pope Joan. Dryden.

Obscure persons have insulted men of great worth, and pelted them from coverts with little objections. Atterbury.

The whole empire could hardly subdue me, and I might easily with stones pelt the metropolis to pieces. Swift.

2. To throw; to cast.

My Phillis me with pelted apples plies,
Then tripping to the woods the wanton hies. Dryden.

PE'LTING. adj. This word in Shakespeare signifies, I know not why, mean; paltry; pitiful.

Could great men thunder, Jove could ne'er be quiet;
For every pelting petty officer
Would use his heav'n for thunder. Shakespeare.

Fogs falling in the land,

Some Athens periſhes, or ſome Tully bleeds. Pope.

In the Iliad, the anger of Achilles had cauſed the death of ſo many Grecians; and in the Odyſſey, the ſubjects periſhed through their own fault. Pope.

2. To be in a perpetual ſtate of decay.

Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of periſhing diſtance, of which no two parts exiſt together, but follow in ſucceſſion; as expanſion is the idea of laſting diſtance, all whoſe parts exiſt together. Locke.

3. To be loſt eternally.

Theſe, as natural brute beaſts made to be deſtroyed, ſpeak evil of the things they underſtand not, and ſhall utterly periſh. 2 Peter, ii. 12.

O ſuffer me not to periſh in my ſins, Lord careſt thou not that I periſh, who wilt that all ſhould be ſaved, and that none ſhould periſh. Moreton's D. Ex.

To PE'RISH. v. a. To deſtroy: to decay. Not in uſe.

The ſplitting rocks cow'r'd in the ſinking ſands,
And would not daſh me with their ragged ſides;
Becauſe thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace periſh Margaret. Sh. Hen. VI.

Riſe, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy periſh'd lord. Dryden.

He was ſo reſerved, that he would impart his ſecrets to nobody; whereupon this cloſeneſs did a little periſh his underſtandings. Collier on Friendſhip.

Familiar now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the publick woe forget your own,
You weep not for a periſh'd lord alone. Pope.

PE'RISHABLE. adj. [from periſh.] Liable to periſh; ſubject to decay; of ſhort duration.

We derogate from his eternal power to aſcribe to them the ſame dominion over our immortal ſouls, which they have over all bodily ſubſtances and periſhable natures. Raleigh.

To theſe purpoſes nothing can ſo much contribute as medals of undoubted authority not periſhable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addiſon.

It is princes greateſt preſent felicity to reign in their ſubjects hearts; but theſe are too periſhable to preſerve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful hiſtorians. Swift.

Human nature could not ſuſtain the reflection of having all its ſchemes and expectations to determine with this frail and periſhable compoſition of fleſh and blood. Rogers.

Thrice has he ſeen the periſhable kind
Of men decay. Pope's Odyſſey.

PE'RISHABLENESS. n. ſ. [from periſhable.] Liableneſs to be deſtroyed; liableneſs to decay.

Suppoſe an iſland ſeparate from all commerce, but having nothing becauſe of its commonneſs and periſhableneſs fit to ſupply the place of money; what reaſon could any have to enlarge poſſeſſions beyond the uſe of his family? Locke.

PE'RJURER. n. ſ. [from perjure.] One that ſwears falſely.

The common oath of the Scythians was by the ſword and fire; for that they accounted thoſe two ſpecial divine powers, which ſhould work vengeance on the perjurers. Spenſer.

PE'RJURY. n. ſ. [perjurium, Lat.] Falſe oath.

My great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Cried aloud——What ſcourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford falſe Clarence,
And ſo he vaniſh'd. Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

PE'RIWIG. n. ſ. [perruque, Fr.] Adſcititious hair; hair not natural, worn by way of ornament or concealment of baldneſs.

Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me ſuch a colour'd periwig. Shakeſpeare.

It offends me to hear a robuſteous periwig-pated fellow tear a paſſion to tatters, to ſplit the ears of the groundlings. Shakeſpeare.

The ſun's
Diſhevel'd beams and ſcatter'd fires
Serve but for ladies periwigs and tires
In lovers ſonnets. Donne.

Madam Time, be ever bald,
I'll not thy periwig be call'd. Cleaveland.

For valing of their viſages his highneſs and the marquiſs bought each a periwig, ſomewhat to overſhadow their foreheads. Wotton.

They uſed falſe hair or periwigs. Arbuth. on Coins.

From her own head Megara takes
A periwig of twiſted ſnakes. Swift.

To PE'RIWIG. v. a. [from the noun.] To dreſs in falſe hair.

Now when the winter's keener breath began
To cryſtallize the Baltick ocean,
To glaze the lakes, to bridle up the floods,
And periwig with ſnow the bald-pate woods.
Sylveſter.

Near the door an entrance gapes,
Crouded round with antick ſhapes,
Diſcord periwig'd with ſnakes,
See the dreadful ſtrides ſhe takes. Swift's Miſc.

To PERK. v. n. [from perch, Skinner.] To hold up the head with an affected briſkneſs.

If, after all, you think it a diſgrace,
That Edward's miſs thus perks it in your face;
To ſee a piece of ſailing fleſh and blood,
In all the reſt ſo impudently good;
Faith, let the modeſt matrons of the town
Come here in crouds, and ſtare the ſtrumpet down. Pope.

To PERK. v. a. To dreſs; to prank.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a gliſt'ring grief,
And wear a golden ſorrow. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

PERK. adj. Pert; briſk; airy. Obſolete.

My ragged rents
Wont in the wind, and wag their wriggle tails,
Perk as a peacock, but nought avails. Spenſer.

1. Duration; conſiſtency; continuance in the ſame ſtate; laſtingneſs.

Salt, they ſay, is the baſis of ſolidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variouſly blended together, but would remain incompacted. Boyle.

Shall I diſpute whether there be any ſuch material being that hath ſuch a permanence or fixedneſs in being. Hale.

From the permanency and immutability of nature hitherto, they argued its permanency and immutability for the future. Burnet's Theory.

2. Continuance in reſt.

Such a punctum to our conceptions is almoſt equivalent to permanency and reſt. Bentley.

PE'RMANENT. adj. [permanent, Fr. permanens, Lat.]

1. Durable; not decaying; unchanged.

If the authority of the maker do prove unchangeableneſs in the laws which God hath made, then muſt all laws which he hath made be neceſſarily forever permanent, though they be but of circumſtance only. Hooker.

That eternal duration ſhould be at once, is utterly unconceivable, and that one permanent inſtant ſhould be commenſurate or rather equal to all ſucceſſions of ages. More.

Pure and unchang'd, and needing no defence
From ſins, as did my frailer innocence;
Their joy ſincere, and with no more ſorrow mixt,
Eternity ſtands permanent and fixt. Dryden.

2. Of long continuance.

His meaning is, that in theſe, or ſuch other light injuries, which either leave no permanent effect, or only ſuch as may be born without any great prejudice, we ſhould exerciſe our patience. Kettlewell.

PE'RMANENTLY. adv. [from permanent.] Durably; laſtingly.

It does, like a compact or conſiſtent body, deny to mingle permanently with the contiguous liquor. Boyle.

PERMA'NSION. n. ſ. [from permaneo, Lat.] Continuance.

With thy permiſſion then, and thus forewarn'd,
The willinger I go. Milton.

You have given me your permiſſion for this addreſs, and encouraged me by your peruſal and approbation. Dryden.

PERMI'SSIVE. adj. [from permitto, Latin.]

1. Granting liberty, not favour; not hindering, though not approving.

We bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permiſſive paſs,
And not the puniſhment. Shakeſp. Meaſ. for Meaſ.

Hypocriſy, the only evil that walks
Inviſible, except to God alone
By his permiſſive will, through heav'n and earth. Milton.

2. Granted: ſuffered without hindrance; not authoriſed or favoured.

If this doth authoriſe uſury, which before was but permiſſive it is better to mitigate uſury by declaration, than to ſuffer it to rage by connivance. Bacon's Eſſays.

Thus I embolden'd ſpake, and freedom us'd Permiſſive, and acceptance found. Milton's Par. L.

Clad
With what permiſſive glory ſince his fall
Was left him, or falſe glitter. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

PERMI'SSIVELY. adv. [from permiſſive.] By bare allowance; without hindrance.

As to a war for the propagation of the chriſtian faith, I would be glad to hear ſpoken concerning the lawfulneſs, not only permiſſively, but whether it be not obligatory to chriſtian princes to deſign it. Bacon's Holy War.

PHILOSO'PHICAL. } from philosophy.]

1. Belonging to philosophy; suitable to a philosopher; formed by philosophy.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity:
The stoick last in philosophick pride
By him call'd virtue; and his virtuous man,
Wise, perfect in himself, and all possessing. Milton.

How could our chymick friends go on
To find the philosophick stone. Prior.

When the safety of the publick is endangered, the appearance of a philosophical or affected indolence must arise either from stupidity or perfidiousness. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Skilled in philosophy.

We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar, things supernatural and causeless. Shakespeare.

Acquaintance with God is not a speculative knowledge, built on abstracted reasonings about his nature and essence, such as philosophical minds often busy themselves in, without reaping from thence any advantage towards regulating their passions, but practical knowledge. Atterbury.

3. Frugal; abstemious.

This is what nature's wants may well suffice:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
I'll mingle something of our times to please. Dry.

PHILOSO'PHICALLY. adv. [from philosophical.] In a philosophical manner; rationally; wisely.

The law of commonweales that cut off the right hand of malefactors, if philosophically executed, is impartial; otherwise the amputation not equally punisheth all. Brown.

No man has ever treated the passion of love with so much delicacy of thought and of expression, or searched into the nature of it more philosophically than Ovid. Dryden.

If natural laws were once settled, they are never to be reversed; to violate and infringe them, is the same as what we call miracle, and doth not sound very philosophically out of the mouth of an atheist. Bentley's Sermons.

To PHILOSO'PHIZE. v. a. [from philosophy.] To play the philosopher; to reason like a philosopher; to moralize; to search into nature; to enquire into the causes of effects.

Qualities occult to Aristotle, must be so to us; and we must not philosophize beyond sympathy and antipathy. Glanville.

The wax philosophized upon the matter, and finding out at last that it was burning, made the brick so hard, cast itself into the fire. L'Estrange.

Two doctors of the schools were philosophizing upon the advantages of mankind above all other creatures. L'Estrange.

Some of our philosophizing divines have too much exalted the faculties of our souls, when they have maintained, that by their force mankind has been able to find out God. Dryden.

PHI'LOSOPHY. n. s. [philosophie, Fr. philosophia, Latin.]

Make the proper use of each extreme,
And write with fury, but correct with phlegm. Roscommon.

He who supreme in judgment, as in wit,
Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ,
Yet judg'd with coolness, though he sung with fire;
His precepts teach, but what his works inspire.
Our criticks take a contrary extreme,
They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm. Pope.

Let melancholy rule supreme,
Choler preside, or blood or phlegm,
It makes no diff'rence in the case
Nor is complexion honour's place. Swift.

2. Water among the chymists.

A linen cloth, dipped in common spirit of wine, is not burnt by the flame, because the phlegm of the liquor defends the cloth. Boyle.

PHLE'GMAGOGUES. n. s. [φλέγμα and ἄγω; phlegmagogue, Fr.] A purge of the milder sort, supposed to evacuate phlegm, and leave the other humours.

The pituitous temper of the stomachick ferment must be corrected, and phlegmagogues must evacuate it. Floyer.

PHLEGMA'TICK. adj. [φλεγματικὸς; phlegmatique, Fr. from phlegm.]

The beech, the ſwimming alder and the plane. Dryden.

PLA'NET. n. ſ. [planeta, Lat. πλανης; planette, French.]

Planets are the erratick or wandering ſtars, and which are not like the fixt ones always in the ſame poſition to one another: we now number the earth among the primary planets, becauſe we know it moves round the ſun, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus and Mercury do, and that in a path or circle between Mars and Venus: and the moon is accounted among the ſecondary planets or ſatellites of the primary, ſince ſhe moves round the earth: all the planets have, beſides their motion round the ſun, which makes their year, alſo a motion round their own axes, which makes their day; as the earth's revolving ſo makes our day and night: it is more than probable, that the diameters of all the planets are longer than their axes: we know know 'tis in our earth; and Flamsteed and Cassini found it to be so in Jupiter: Sir Isaac Newton asserts our earth's equatorial diameter to exceed the other about thirty-four miles; and indeed else the motion of the earth would make the sea rise so high at the equator, as to drown all the parts thereabouts. Harris.

Barbarous villains! hath this lovely face
Rul'd like a wand'ring planet over me,
And could it not enforce them to relent? Shakesp.

And planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There are seven planets or errant stars in the lower orbs of heaven. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The Chaldeans were much devoted to astrological devices, and an opinion that every hour of the day was governed by a particular planet, reckoning them according to their usual order, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, Mercury, Luna. Wilkins.

PLA'NETARY. adj. [planetaire, Fr. from planet.]

PLANT. n. s. [plant, Fr. planta, Latin.]

1. Any thing produced from seed; any vegetable production.

What comes under this denomination, Ray has distributed under twenty-seven genders or kinds: 1. The imperfect plants, which do either totally want both flower and seed, or else seem to do so. 2. Plants producing either no flower at all, or an imperfect one, whose seed is so small as not to be discernible by the naked eye. 3. Those whose seeds are not so small, as singly to be invisible, but yet have an imperfect or staminous flower; i. e. such a one, as is without the petala, having only the stamina and the perianthium. 4. Such as have a compound flower, and emit a kind of white juice or milk when their stalks are cut off or their branches broken off. 5. Such as have a compound flower of a discous figure, the seed pappous, or winged with downe, but emit no milk. 6. The herbæ capitatæ, or such whose flower is composed of many small, long, fistulous or hollow flowers gathered round together in a round button or head, which is usually covered with a squamous or scaly coat. 7. Such as have their leaves entire and undivided into jags. 8. The corymbiferous plants, which have a compound discous flower, but the seeds have no downe adhering to them. 9. Plants with a perfect flower, and having only one single seed belonging to each single flower. 10. Such as have rough, hairy or bristly seeds. 11. The umbelliferous plants, which have a pentapetalous flower, and belonging to each single flower are two seeds, lying naked and joining together; they are called umbelliferous, because the plant, with its branches and flowers, hath an head like a lady's umbrella; [1.] Such as have a broad flat seed almost of the figure of a leaf, which are encompassed round about with something like leaves. [2.] Such as have a longish seed, swelling out in the middle, and larger than the former. [3.] Such as have a shorter seed. [4.] Such as have a tuberose root. [5.] Such as have a wrinkled, channelated or striated seed. 12. The stellate plants, which are so called, because their leaves grow on their stalks at certain intervals or distances in the form of a radiant star: their flowers are really monopetalous, divided into four segments, which look like so many petals: and each flower is succeeded by two seeds at the bottom of it. 13. The asperifolia, or rough leaved plants: they have their leaves placed alternately, or in no certain order on their stalks; they have a monopetalous flower cut or divided into five partitions, and after every flower there succeed usually four seeds. 14. The suffrutices, or verticilate plants: their leaves grow by pairs on their stalks, one leaf right against another; their leaf is monopetalous, and usually in form of an helmet. 15. Such as have naked seeds, more than four, succeeding their flowers, which therefore they call polyspermæ plantæ semine nudo; by naked seeds, they mean such as are not included in any seed pod. 16. Bacciferous plants, or such as bear berries. 17. Multisiliquous, or corniculate plants, or such as have, after each flower, many distinct, long, slender, and many times crooked cases or siliquæ, in which their seed is contained, and which, when they are ripe, open themselves and let the seeds drop out. 18. Such as have a monopetalous flower, either uniform or difform, and after each flower a peculiar seed-case containing the seed, and this often divided into many distinct cells. 19. Such as have an uniform tetrapetalous flower, but bear these seeds in oblong siliquous cases. 20. Vasculiferous plants, with a tetrapetalous flower, but often anomalous. 21. Leguminous plants, or such as bear pulse, with a papilionaceous flower. 22. Vasculiferous plants, with a pentapetalous flower; these have, besides the common calix, a peculiar case containing their seed, and their flower consisting of five leaves 23. Plants with a true bulbous root, which consists but of one round ball or head, out of whose lower part go many fibres to keep it firm in the earth: the plants of this kind come up but with one leaf; they have no footstalk, and are long and slender: the seed vessels divided into three partitions: their flower is sexapetalous. 24. Such as have their fruits approaching to a bulbous form: these emit, at first coming up, but one leaf, and in leaves, flowers and roots resemble the true bulbous plant. 25. Culmiferous plants, with a grassy leaf, are such as have a smooth hollow-jointed stalk, with one sharp-pointed leaf at each joint, encompassing the stalk, and set out without any foot stalk: their seed is contained within a chaffy husk. 26. Plants with a grassy leaf, but not culmiferous, with an imperfect or staminous flower. 27. Plants whose place of growth is uncertain and various, chiefly water plants.

Butchers and villains,
How sweet a plant have you untimely cropt. Sh.

POPULAR. adj. [populaire, Fr. popularis, Lat.]

1. Vulgar; plebeian.

I was ſorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried in many places. King Charles.

The emmet join'd in her popular tribes
Of commonalty. Milton.

So the popular vote inclines. Milton.

2. Suitable to the common people; familiar; not critical.

Homilies are plain and popular inſtructions. Hooker.

3. Beloved by the people; pleaſing to the people.

It might have been more popular and plauſible to vulgar ears, if this firſt diſcourſe had been ſpent in extolling the force of laws. Hooker.

Such as were popular,
And well-deserving, were advanc'd by grace.
Daniel.

The old general was set aside, and prince Rupert put into the command, which was no popular change. Clarendon.

4. Studious of the favour of the people.

A popular man is, in truth, no better than a prostitute to common fame and to the people. Dryden.

His virtues have undone his country;
Such popular humanity is treason. Addison's Cato.

5. Prevailing or raging among the populace: as, a popular distemper.

POPULA'RITY. n. s. [popularitas, Lat. popularité, Fr. from popular.]

1. Graciousness among the people; state of being favoured by the people.

The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny. Bacon.

Your mind has been above the wretched affectation of popularity. Dryden.

Admire we then
Or popularity, or stars, or strings,
The mob's applauses, or the gifts of kings? Pope.

He could be at the head of no factions and cabals, nor attended by a hired rabble, which her flatteries might represent as popularity. Swift.

2. Representation suited to vulgar conception; what effects the vulgar.

The persuader's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by solid reasons, so it may be represented also by colours, popularities and circumstances, which sway the ordinary judgment. Bacon.

PO'PULARLY. adv. [from popular,]

1. In a popular manner; so as to please the crowd.

The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the salutations of the crowd. Dryden.

Influenc'd by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryd.

3. According to vulgar conception.

Nor can we excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow those commendatory conceits, which popularly set forth the eminency thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To PO'PULATE. v. n. [from populus, Lat.] To breed people.

When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity, that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon's Essays.

POPULA'TION. n. s. [from populate.] The state of a country with respect to numbers of people.

The population of a kingdom does not exceed the stock of the kingdom, which should maintain them; neither is the population to be reckoned only by the number; for a smaller number, that spend more and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number, that live lower and gather more. Bacon.

POPULO'SITY. n. s. [from populous.] Populousness; multitude of people.

How it conduceth unto populosity, we shall make but little doubt; there are causes of numerosity in any species. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

PO'PULOUS. adj. [populosus, Lat.] Full of people; numerously inhabited.

A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heav'nly company. Shakesp.

Far the greater part have kept,
Their station: heav'n, yet populous, retains Number sufficient to possess her realms. Milton.

PO'PULOUSLY. adv. [from populous.] With much people.

PO'PULOUSNESS. n. s. [from populous.] The state of abounding with people.

This will be allowed by any that considers the vastness, the opulence, the populousness of this region, with the ease and facility wherewith 'tis governed. Temple's Miscellanies.

PO'RCELAIN. n. s. [porcelaine, Fr. said to be delivered from pour cent années; because it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelain were matured under ground one hundred years.]

1. China; china ware; fine dishes, of a middle nature between earth and glass, and therefore semipellucid.

We have burials in several earths, where we put divers cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. Bacon.

We are not thoroughly resolved concerning porcelain or china dishes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which lieth in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown's Vul. Err.

The fine materials made it weak;
Porcelain, by being pure, is apt to break. Dryden.

These look like the workmanship of heav'n:
This is the porcelain clay of human kind,
And therefore cast into these noble moulds. Dryd.

2. [Portulaca, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

PORCH. n. s. [porche, Fr. porticus, Lat.]

1. A roof supported by pillars before a door; an entrance.

Ehud went forth through the porch, and shut the doors of the parlour. Judges iii. 23.

Not infants in the porch of life were free,
The sick, the old, that could but hope a day
Longer by nature's bounty, not let stay. Ben Jon.

2. A portico; a covered walk.

All this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Shakespeare.

PO'RCUPINE. n. s. [porc, espi, or epic, Fr. porcospino, Italian.]

The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig: there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger size. Hill

This stubborn Cade
Fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp quill'd porcupine. Shakes.

Long bearded comets stick,
Like flaming porcupines, to their left sides,
As they would shoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.

By the black prince of Monomotapa's side were the glaring cat-a-mountain and the quill-darting porcupine. Arbuthnot and Pope.

PORE. n. s. [pore, Fr. πόρος.]

1. Spiracle of the skin; passage of perspiration.

Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, by ointments, and anointing themselves all over, may justly move a man to think, that these fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd?
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through every pore. Milton.

2. Any narrow spiracle or passage.

Pores are small interstices between the particles of matter which constitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quin.

From veins of vallies milk and nectar broke,
And honey sweating through the pores of oak. Dryden.

To PORE. v. n. [πόρος is the optick nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from some English word.] To look with great intenseness and care; to examine with great attention.

All delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth, while truth the while
Doth falsely blind the eyesight. Shakespeare.

A book was writ, called Tetrachordon,
The subject new: it walk'd the town a while,
Numb'ring good intellects; now seldom por'd on. Milton.

The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the same thing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Let him with pedants hunt for praise in books,
Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen,
Grow old and vainly proud in fancy'd knowledge. Rowe.

With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.

He hath been poring so long upon Fox's Martyrs, that he imagines himself living in the reign of queen Mary. Swift.

The design is to avoid the imputation of pedantry, to shew that they understand men and manners, and have not been poring upon old unfashionable books. Swift.

PO'REBLIND adj. [commonly spoken and written purblind.] Nearsighted; shortsighted.

Poreblind men see best in the dimmer light, and likewise have their sight stronger near at hand, than those that are not poreblind, and can read and write smaller letters; for that the spirits visual in those that are poreblind are thinner and rarer than in others, and therefore the greater light disperseth them. Bacon's Natural History.

PO'RINESS. n. s. [from pory.] Fullness of pores.

I took off the dressings, and set the trepan above the fractured bone, considering the poriness of the bone below. Wiseman.

PORI'STICK method. n. s. [πορισμος.] In mathematicks, is that which determines when, by what means, and how many different ways a problem may be solved. Dict.

PORK. n. s. [porc, Fr. porcus, Lat.] Swine's flesh unsalted.

You are no good member of the commonwealth; for, in converting Jews to Christians, you raise the price of pork. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

All flesh full of nourishment, as beef and pork, increase the matter of phlegm. Floyer on the Hum.

PO'RKER. n. s. [from pork.] A hog; a pig.

Strait to the lodgments of his herd he run,
Where the fat porkers slept beneath the sun. Pope.

PO'RKEATER. n. s. [pork and eater.] One who feeds on pork.

This making of christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be porkeaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money. Shak.

PO'RKET. n. s. [from pork.] A young hog.

A priest appears
And off'rings to the flaming altars bears;
A porket, and a lamb that never suffer'd shears. Dryden.

PO'RKLING. n. s. [from pork.] A young pig.

A hovel
Will serve thee in winter, moreover than that,
To shut up thy porklings thou meanest to fat. Tusser.

PORO'SITY n. s. [from porous.] Quality of having pores.

This is a good experiment for the disclosure of the nature of colours; which of them require a finer porosity, and which a grosser. Bac. Nat. Hist.

PO'ROUS. adj. [poreux, Fr. from pore.] Having small spiracles or passages.

Vultures and dogges have torne from every lim
His porous skin; and forth his soul is fled. Chapm.

The rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Rose a fresh fountain, and with many a rill
Water'd the garden. Milton's Par. Lost.

Of light the greater part he took, and, plac'd
In the sun's orb, made porous to receive
And drink the liquid light; firm to retain
Her gather'd beams; great palace now of light. Milton.

PO'ROUSNESS. n. s. [from porous.] The quality of having pores; the porous part.

They will forcibly get into the porousness of it, and pass between part and part, and separate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a solid substance, by having its thinnest parts pressed into it. Digby on Bodies.

PO'RPHYRE. } n. s. [from πορφύρεος; porphyrites,
PO'RPHYRY. } Lat. porphyre, Fr.] Marble of a particular kind.

I like best the porphyry, white or green marble, with a mullar or upper stone of the same. Peacham.

Consider the red and white colours in porphyre; hinder light but from striking on it, its colours vanish niſh, and produce no ſuch ideas in us; but upon the return of light, it produces theſe appearances again. Locke.

PO'RTRAIT. n. ſ. [portrait, Fr.] A picture drawn after the life.

As this idea of perfection is of little uſe in portraits, or the reſemblances of particular perſons, ſo neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with ſome ſpecks of frailty, ſuch as they have been deſcribed in hiſtory. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

The figure of his body was ſtrong, proportionable, beautiful; and were his picture well drawn, it muſt deſerve the praiſe given to the portraits of Raphael. Prior.

If a portrait-painter is deſirous to raiſe and improve his ſubject, he has no other means than by approaching it to a general idea; he leaves out all the minute breaks and peculiarities in the face, and changes the dreſs from a temporary faſhion to one more permanent, which has annexed to it no ideas of meanneſs, from its being familiar to us. Reynolds.

In portraits, the grace, and, we may add, the likeneſs, conſiſts more in taking the general air, than in obſerving the exact ſimilitude of every feature. Reynolds.

To PO'RTRAIT. v. a. [portraire, Fr. from the noun.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and ſhould be written in the following examples portray.

In moſt exquiſite pictures, they blaze and portrait not only the dainty lineaments of beauty, but alſo round about ſhadow the rude thickets and craggy cliffs. Spenſer.

1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a ſtand or ſtop.

Learning was poſ'd, philoſophy was ſet,
Sophiſters taken in a fiſher's net. Herbert.

How God's eternal ſon ſhould be man's brother,
Poſeth his proudeſt intellectual power. Craſhaw.

The only remaining queſtion to me I confeſs is a poſing one. Hammond.

As an evidence of human infirmities, I ſhall give inſtances of our intellectual blindneſs, not that I deſign to poſe them with thoſe common enigmas of magnetiſm. Glanville.

Particularly in learning languages, there is leaſt occaſion for poſing of children. Locke on Education.

2. To appoſe; to interrogate.

She in the preſence of others poſed and ſifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very duke of York or no. Bacon's Henry VII.

PO'SER. n. ſ. [from poſe.] One that aſketh queſtions to try capacities; an examiner.

He that queſtioneth much, ſhall learn much; but let his queſtions not be troubleſome, for that is fit for a poſer. Bacon.

PO'SITED. adj. [poſitus, Lat.] It has the appearance of a participle preter. but it has no verb.] Placed; ranged.

That the principle that ſet on work theſe organs is nothing elſe but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus poſited or diſpoſed, is moſt apparently falſe. Hale.

PO'SITION. n. ſ. [poſition, Fr. poſitio, Lat.]

1. State

1. State of being placed; situation.

Iron having ſtood long in a window, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude till it attain the former poſition. Wotton.

They are the happieſt regions for fruits, by the excellence of ſoil, the poſition of mountains, and the frequency of ſtreams. Temple.

Since no one ſees all, and we have different proſpects of the ſame thing, according to our different poſitions to it, it is not incongruous to try whether another may not have notions that eſcaped him. Locke.

By varying the poſition of my eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the ſun's light, the colour of the ſun's reflected light conſtantly varied upon the ſpeculum as it did upon my eye. Newton's Opticks.

Place ourſelves in ſuch a poſition toward the object, or place the object in ſuch a poſition toward our eye, as may give us the cleareſt repreſentation of it; for a different poſition greatly alters the appearance of bodies. Watts's Logick.

2. Principle laid down.

Of any offence or ſin therein committed againſt God, with what conſcience can ye accuſe us, when your own poſitions are, that the things we obſerve ſhould every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thouſand lives. Hooker.

Let not the proof of any poſitions depend on the poſitions that follow, but always on thoſe which go before. Watts.

3. Advancement of any principle.

A fallacious illation is to conclude from the poſition of the antecedent unto the poſition of the conſequent, or the remotion of the conſequent to the remotion of the antecedent. Brown.

4. [In grammar.] The ſtate of a vowel placed before two conſonants, as pómpous; or a double conſonant, as áxle.

Poſi'tional. adj. [from poſition.] Reſpecting poſition.

The leaves of cataputia or ſpurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by purge or vomit; as old wives ſtill do preach, is a ſtrange conceit, aſcribing unto plants poſitional operations. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Po'sitive. adj. [poſitivus, Lat. poſtif, Fr.]

1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed; real; abſolute.

The power or bloſſom is a poſitive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.

It is well and truly ſaid in ſchools, in ſin there is nothing poſtive; but it is a want of that which ought to be, or ſubſiſt, partly in the nature of man, and partly in the actions of nature. Perkins.

Hardneſs carries ſomewhat more of poſitive in it than impenetrability, which is negative; and is perhaps more a conſequence of ſolidity, than ſolidity itſelf. Locke.

Whatſoever doth or can exiſt, or be conſidered as one thing, is poſitive; and ſo not only ſimple ideas and ſubſtances, but modes alſo are poſitive beings, though the parts, of which they conſiſt, are very often relative one to another. Locke.

2. Abſolute; particular; direct; not implied.

As for poſitive words, that he would not bear arms againſt king Edward's ſon; though the words ſeem calm, yet it was a plain and direct over-ruling of the king's title. Bacon.

3. Dogmatical; ready to lay down notions with confidence; ſtubborn in opinion.

I am ſometimes doubting, when I might be poſitive, and ſometimes confident out of ſeaſon. Rymer.

Some poſitive perſiſting fops we know,
That, if once wrong, will needs be always ſo;
But you, with pleaſure, own your errors paſt,
And make each day a critick on the laſt. Pope.

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment.

In laws, that which is natural, bindeth univerſally; that which is poſitive, not ſo. Hooker.

Although no laws but poſitive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be poſitive; poſitive laws are either permanent or elſe changeable, according as the matter itſelf is, concerning which they were made. Hooker.

The law is called poſitive, which is not inbred, imprinted, or infuſed, into the heart of man, by nature or grace; but is impoſed by an external mandate of a lawgiver, having authority to command. White.

Laws are but poſitive; love's pow'r we ſee,
Is nature's ſanction, and her firſt decree. Dryden.

5. Having the power to enact any law.

Not to conſent to the enacting of ſuch a law, which has no view beſides the general good, unleſs another law ſhall at the ſame time paſs, with no other view but that of advancing the power of one party alone; what is this but to claim a poſitive voice, as well as a negative? Swift

6. Certain; aſſured: as, he was poſitive as to the fact.

Po'sitively. adv. [from poſitive.]

1. Abſolutely; by way of direct poſition.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be eſteemed good or evil comparatively, and not poſitively or ſimply. Bacon.

2. Not negatively.

It is impoſſible that any ſucceſſive duration ſhould be actually and poſitively infinite, or have infinite ſucceſſions already gone and paſt. Bentley.

3. Certainly; without dubitation.

Give me ſome breath, ſome little pauſe,
Before I poſitively ſpeak in this. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

It was abſolutely certain, that this part was poſitively yours, and could not poſſibly be written by any other. Drayton.

4. Peremptorily; in ſtrong terms.

I would aſk any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not poſitively require humility and meekneſs to all men. Spratt.

Po'sitiveness. n. ſ. [from poſitive.]

1. Actualneſs; not mere negation.

The poſitiveneſs of ſins of commiſſion lies both in the habitude of the will and in the executed act too; whereas the poſitiveneſs of ſins of omiſſion is in the habitude of the will only. Norris.

2. Peremptorineſs; confidence.

This peremptorineſs is of two ſorts; the one a magiſterialneſs in matters of opinion, the other a poſitiveneſs in relating matters of fact; in the one we impoſe upon men's underſtandings, in the other on their faith. Gov. of the Tongue.

Positi'vity. n. ſ. [from poſitiveneſs.] Peremptorineſs; confidence. A low word.

Courage and poſitivity are never more neceſſary than on ſuch an occaſion; but it is good to join ſome argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be ſtrongly pronounced too. Watts.

Po'siture. n. ſ. [poſitura, Lat.] The manner in which any thing is placed.

Suppoſing the poſiture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, and ſuppoſing all other things, which did concur to the production of that caſt, to be the very ſame they were, there is no doubt but in this caſe the caſt is neceſſary. Bramhall.

Po'snet. n. ſ. [from baſſinet, Fr. Skinner.] A little baſon; a porringer; a ſkillet.

To make proof of the incorporation of ſilver and tin in equal quantity, and alſo whether it yield no ſolidneſs more than ſilver; and again, whether it will endure the ordinary fire, which belongeth to chaffing-diſhes, poſnets, and ſuch other ſilver veſſels. Bacon.

Posse. n. ſ. [Latin.] An armed power: from poſſe comitatûs, the power of the ſhires. A low word.

The poſſe comitatûs, the power of the whole county is legally committed unto him. Bacon.

As if the paſſion that rules, were the ſheriff of the place, and came off with all the poſſe, the underſtanding is ſeized. Locke.

I think, that the man is poſſeſſed. Swift.

6. To affect by inteſtine power.

He's poſſeſt with greatneſs,
And ſpeaks not to himſelf, but with a pride
That quarrels at ſelf-breath. Shakeſ. Troil. and Creſſ.

Let not your ears deſpiſe my tongue,
Which ſhall poſſeſs them with the heavieſt ſound
That ever yet they heard. Shakeſpeare.

Poſſeſt with rumours full of idle dreams,
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear. Shakeſpeare.

What fury, O ſon,
Poſſeſſes thee, to bend that mortal dart
Againſt thy father's head? Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

With the rage of all their race poſſeſt,
Stung to the ſoul the brothers ſtart from reſt. Pope.

Poſſe'ssion. n. ſ. [poſſeſſion, Fr. poſſeſſio, Lat.]

Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable, which the spirit of prayer
Inspir'd. Milton.

No man can always have the same spiritual pleasure in his prayers; for the greatest saints have sometimes suffered the banishment of the heart, sometimes are fervent, sometimes they feel a barrenness of devotion; for this spirit comes and goes. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

5. Entreaty; submissive importunity.

Prayer among men is supposed a means to change the person to whom we pray; but prayer to God doth not change him, but fits us to receive the things prayed for. Stilling fleet.

PRA'YERBOOK. n. s. [prayer and book.] Book of publick or private devotions.

Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shak.

I know not the names or number of the family which now reigns, farther than the prayer-book informs me. Swift.

PRE. [præ, Lat.] A particle which, prefixed to words derived from the Latin, marks priority of time or rank.

To PREACH. v. n. [prædico, Lat. prescher, Fr.] To pronounce a publick discourse upon sacred subjects.

From that time Jesus began to preach. Matt.
Prophets preach of thee at Jerusalem. Nehem.

It is evident in the apostles preaching at Jerusalem and elsewhere, that at the first proposal of the truth of Christ to them, and the doctrine of repentance, whole multitudes received the faith, and came in. Hammond.

Divinity would not pass the yard and loom, the forge or anvil, nor preaching be taken in as an easier supplementary trade, by those that disliked the pains of their own. Decay of Piety.

As he was sent by his father, so were the apostles commissioned by him to preach to the gentile world. Decay of Piety.

The shape of our cathedral is not proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre with galleries. Graunt.

To PREACH. v. a.

1. To proclaim or publish in religious orations.

The Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul. Acts.

He decreed to commissionate messengers to preach this covenant to all mankind. Hammond.

2. To inculcate publickly; to teach with earnestness.

There is not any thing publickly notified, but we may properly say it is preach'd. Hooker.

He oft to them preach'd
Conversion and repentance. Milton.

And tell us how we all began from earth? Dryd.

Among the rest, the rich Galesus lies,
A good old man while peace he preach'd in vain,
Amidst the madness of th' unruly train. Dryden.

PREACH. n. s. [prêche, Fr. from the verb.] A discourse; a religious oration. Not in use.

This oversight occasioned the French spitefully to term religion in that sort exercised, a mere preach. Hooker.

PREA'CHER. n. s. [prescheur, Fr. from preach.]

1. One who discourses publickly upon religious subjects.

The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the preachers. Psalm lxviii. 11.

You may hear the sound of a preacher's voice, when you cannot distinguish what he saith. Bacon.

Here lies a truly honest man,
One of those few that in this town
Honour all preachers; hear their own. Crashaw.

2. One who inculcates any thing with earnestness and vehemence.

No preacher is listened to but Time, which gives us the same train of thought, that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before. Sw.

PREA'CHMENT. n. s. [from preach.] A sermon mentioned in contempt; discourse affectedly solemn.

Was't you, that revell'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high descent? Sha.

All this is but a preachment upon the text. L'Est.

PRE'AMBLE. n. s. [preambule, Fr.] Something previous; introduction; preface.

How were it possible that the church should any way else with such ease and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, dissemble what wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is so necessary a preamble, especially to common prayer. Hooker.

Truth as in this we do not violate, so neither is the same gainsayed or crossed, no not in those very preambles placed before certain readings, wherein the steps of the Latin service book have been somewhat too nearly followed. Hooker.

Doors shut, visits forbidden, and divers contestations with the queen, all preambles of ruin, though now and then he did wring out some petty contentments. Wotton.

This preamble to that history was not improper for this relation. Clarendon's Hist. of the Rebellion.

With preambles sweet
Of charming symphony they introduce
Their sacred song, and waken raptures high. Milt.

I will not detain you with a long preamble. Dryd.

PREA'MBULARY. } adj. [from preamble.] Pre-
PREA'MBULOUS. } vious. Not in use, though not inelegant.

He not only undermineth the base of religion, but destroyeth the principle preambulous unto all belief, and puts upon us the remotest error from truth. Brown.

PREAPPREHE'NSION. n. s. [pre and apprehend.] An opinion formed before examination.

A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but such as regarding the clouds, behold them in shapes conformable to preapprehension. Brown.

PREASE. n. s. Press; crowd. Spenser. See PRESS. Obsolete.

A ship into the sacred seas,
New-built, now launch we; and from out our prease
Chuse two and fifty youths. Chapman.

PRE'BEND. n. s. [præbenda, low Latin; prebende, Fr.]

1. A stipend granted in cathedral churches.

His excellency gave the doctor a prebend in St. Patrick's cathedral. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. Sometimes, but improperly, a stipendary of a cathedral; a prebendary.

Deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use, to be of counsel with the bishop. Bacon.

PRE'BENDARY. n. s. [prebendarius, Lat.] A stipendary of a cathedral.

To lords, to principals, to prebendaries. Hubbard.

I bequeath to the Reverend Mr. Grattan, prebendary of St. Audeon's, my gold bottle-screw. Sw.

PRECA'RIOUS. adj. [precarius, Lat. precaire, Fr.] Dependent; uncertain, because depending on the will of another; held by courtesy; changeable or alienable at the pleasure of another. No word is more unskilfully used than this with its derivatives. It is used for uncertain in all its senses; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others; thus there are authors who mention the precariousness of an account, of the weather, of a die.

What subjects will precarious kings regard,
A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryd. n.

Those who live under an arbitrary tyrannick power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and consequently no privileges but what are precarious. Addison.

This little happiness is so very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others. Addison.

He who rejoices in the strength and beauty of youth, should consider by how precarious a tenure he holds these advantages, that a thousand accidents may before the next dawn lay all these glories in the dust. Rogers's Sermons.

PRECA'RIOUSLY. adv. [from precarious.] Uncertainly by dependence; dependently; at the pleasure of others.

If one society cannot meet or convene together, without the leave or licence of the other society; nor treat or enact any thing relative to their own society, without the leave and authority of the other; then is that society, in a manner, dissolved, and subsists precariously upon the mere will and pleasure of the other. Locke.

Our scene precariously subsists too long
On French translation and Italian song:
Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage,

PRECA'RIOUSNESS. n. s. [from precarious.] Uncertainty; dependance on others. The following passage from a book, otherwise elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.

Most consumptive people die of the discharge they spit up, which, with the precariousness of the symptoms of an oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgment of extravasated matter, render the operation but little adviseable. Sharp's Surgery.

PRECAU'TION. n. s. [precaution, Fr. from præcautus, Lat.] Preservative caution; preventive measures.

Unless our ministers have strong assurances of his falling in with the grand alliance, or not opposing it, they cannot be too circumspect and speedy in taking their precautions against any contrary resolution. Addison on the War.

To PRECAU'TION. v. a. [precautioner, French; from the noun.] To warn beforehand.

By the disgraces, disease and beggary of hopeful young young men brought to ruin, he may be precautioned. Locke.

PRECEDA'NEOUS. adj. [This word is, I believe, miſtaken by the author for præcidaneus; præcidaneus, Lat. cut or ſlain before. Nor is it uſed here in its proper ſenſe.] Previous; antecedent.

That priority of particles of ſimple matter, influx of the heavens and preparation of matter might be antecedent and precedaneous, not only in order, but in time, to their ordinary productions. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To PRECE'DE. v. a. [præcedo, Latin; preceder, French.]

1. To go before in order of time.

How are we happy, ſtill in fear of harm;
But harm precedes not ſin. Milton.

Arius and Pelagius durſt provoke,
To what the centuries preceding ſpoke. Dryden.

The ruin of a ſtate was generally preceded by an univerſal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion. Swift.

2. To go before according to the adjuſtment of rank.

PRECE'DENCE. } n. ſ. [from præcedo, Lat.]
PRECE'DENCY. }

1. The act or ſtate of going before; priority.

2. Something going before; ſomething paſt. Not uſed.

I do not like, but yet it does allay
The good precedence. Shakeſpeare's Ant. and Cleop.

It is an epilogue or diſcourſe, to make plain
Some obſcure precedence that hath toſore been ſain. Shakſpeare.

3. Adjuſtment of place.

Among the laws touching precedence in Juſtinian, divers are, that have not yet been ſo received every where by cuſtom. Selden.

The conſtable and marſhal had cognizance, touching the rights of place and precedence. Hale.

4. The foremoſt place in ceremony.

None ſure will claim in hell
Precedence; none, whoſe portion is ſmall
Of preſent pain, that with ambitious mind
Will covet more. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the precedency. Howel.

That perſon hardly will be found,
With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd;
Yet if another could precedence claim,
My fixt deſires could find no fairer aim. Dryden.

5. Superiority.

Books will furniſh him, and give him light and precedency enough to go before a young follower. Locke.

Being diſtracted with different deſires, the next inquiry will be, which of them has the precedency, in determining the will, to the next action? Locke.

PRECE'DENT. adj. [precedent, Fr. precedens, Lat.] Former; going before.

PRECI'SE. adj. [præcis, Fr. præcisus, Lat.]

1. Exact; strict; nice; having strict and determinate limitations.

Means more durable to preserve the laws of God from oblivion and corruption grew in use, not without precise direction from God himself.
Hooker.

You'll not bear a letter for me; you stand upon your honour; why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep the term of mine honour precise. Shakespeare

The state hath given you licence to stay on land six weeks, and let it not trouble you if your occasions ask farther time; for the law in this point is not precise. Bacon.

Let us descend from this top
Of speculation; for the hour precise
Exacts our parting. Milton's Par. Lost.

In human actions there are no degrees and precise natural limits described, but a latitude is indulged. Taylor.

The reasoning must be precise, though the practice may admit of great latitude. Arb. on Alim.

The precise difference between a compound and collective idea is this, that a compound idea unites things of a different kind, but a collective, things of the same kind. Watts.

2. Formal; finical; solemnly and superstitiously exact.

The raillery of the wits in King Charles the Second's reign, upon every thing which they called precise, was carried to so great an extravagance, that it almost put all Christianity out of countenance. Addison.

PRECI'SELY. adv. [from precise.]

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

Doth it follow, that all things in the church, from the greatest to the least, are unholy, which the Lord himself hath not precisely instituted?
Hooker.

When the Lord had once precisely set down a form of executing that wherein we are to serve him, the fault appeareth greater to do that which we are not, than to do that which we are commanded. Hooker.

He knows,
He cannot so precisely weed this land
As his misdoubts present occasion,
His foes are so enrooted with his friends. Shakes.

Where more of these orders than one shall be set in several stories, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns precisely one over another. Watton's Architecture.

PRECI'SENESS. n. s. [from precise.] Exactness; rigid nicety.

I will distinguish the cases; though give me leave, in the handling of them, not to sever them with too much preciseness. Bacon.

When you have fixed proper hours for particular studies, keep to them, not with a superstitious precisenss, but with some good degrees of a regular constancy. Watts.

PRECI'SIAN. n. s. [from precise.]

1. One who limits or restrains.

Though love use reason for his precision, he admits him not for his counsellor. Shakespeare.

2. One who is superstitiously rigorous.

These men, for all the world, like our precisions be,
Who for some cross or saint they in the window see,
Will pluck down all the church. Drayton.

A profane person calls a man of piety a precision.
Watts.

PRECI'SION. n. s. [precision, Fr.] Exact limitation.

He that thinks of being in general, thinks never of any particular species of being; unless he can think of it with and without precision at the same time. Locke.

I have left out the utmost precisions of fractions in these computations as not necessary; these whole numbers shewing well enough the difference of the value of guineas. Locke.

I was unable to treat this part more in detail, without sacrificing perspicuity to ornament, without wandering from the precision or breaking the chain of reasoning. Pope.

PRECI'SIVE. adj. [from precisus, Lat.] Exactly limiting, by cutting off all that is not absolutely relative to the present purpose.

Precisive abstraction is when we consider those things apart, which cannot really exist apart; as, when we consider mode, without considering its substance or subject. Watts.

To PRECLU'DE. v. a. [præcludo, Lat.] To shut out or hinder by some anticipation.

This much will obviate and preclude the objections of our adversaries, that we do not determine the final cause of the systematical parts of the world, merely as they have respect to the exigencies or conveniences of life. Bentley.

If you once allow them such an acceptation of chance, you have precluded yourself from any more reasoning against them. Bentley's Sermons.

I fear

I fear there will be no way left to tell you, that I entirely eſteem you; none but that which no bills can preclude, and no king can prevent. Pope.

PRECO'CIOUS. adj. [præcocis, Lat. precoſe, Fr.] Ripe before the time.

Many precocious trees, and ſuch as have their ſpring in the winter, may be found in moſt parts. Brown.

PRECO'SITY. n. ſ. [from precocious.] Ripeneſs before the time.

Some impute the cauſe of his fall to a precocity of ſpirit and valour in him; and that therefore ſome infectious ſouthern air did blaſt him. Howel.

To PRECO'GITATE. v. a. [præcogito, Lat.] To conſider or ſcheme beforehand.

PRECOGNI'TION. n. ſ. [præ and cognito, Lat.] Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.

PRECONCEI'T. n. ſ. [præ and conceit.] An opinion previouſly formed.

A thing in reaſon impoſſible, which notwithſtanding through their miſfaſhioned preconceit, appeared unto them no leſs certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Hooker.

To PRECONCEI'VE. v. a. [præ and conceive.] To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.

In a dead plain the way ſeemeth the longer, becauſe the eye hath preconceived it ſhorter than the truth, and the fruſtrations of that maketh it ſeem ſo. Bacon.

Fondneſs of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports ſuſpect, nor for want of care, defective. Glanville.

The reaſon why men are ſo weak in governing is, becauſe moſt things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply ſubſequently. South.

PRECONCE'PTION. n. ſ. [præ and conception.] Opinion previouſly formed.

Cuſtom with moſt men prevails more than truth; according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we ſhape the diſcourſe of reaſon itſelf. Hakewill.

PRECO'NTRACT. n. ſ. [præ and contract. This was formerly accented on the laſt ſyllable.] A contract previous to another.

To PRECONTRA'CT. v. a. [præ and contract.] To contract or bargain beforehand.

Some are ſuch as a man cannot make his wife, though he himſelf be unmarried, becauſe they are already precontracted to ſome other; or elſe are in too near a degree of affinity or conſanguinity. Ayliffe.

PRECU'RSE. n. ſ. [from præcurro, Lat.] Forerunning.

The like precurſe of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding ſtill the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on.
Have heaven and earth together demonſtrated. Shakeſpeare.

PRECU'RSOR. n. ſ. [præcurſor, Lat. precurſeur, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.

Jove's lightnings, the precurſors
Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
Were not Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

This contagion might have been preſaged upon conſideration of its precurſors, a rude winter, and a cloſe, ſulphurous and fiery air. Harvey.

Thomas Burnet played the precurſor to the coming of Homer in his Homerides. Pope.

PREDA'CEOUS. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Living by prey.

As thoſe are endowed with poiſon, becauſe they are predaceous; ſo theſe need it not, becauſe their food is near at hand, and may be obtained without conteſt. Derham.

PRE'DAL. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Robbing; practiſing plunder. This word is not countenanced from analogy.

Sarmatia, laid by predal rapine low,
Mourn'd the hard yoke, and ſought relief in vain. Sa. Beyſe.

PRE'DATORY. adj. [prædatorius, Lat. from præda, Lat.]

His ruff creſt he rears,
And pricks up his predeſtinating ears. Dryden.

PREDESTINA'TION. n. ſ. [predeſtination, Fr. from predeſtinate.] Fatal decree; pre-ordination.

Predeſtination we can difference no otherwiſe from providence and preſcience, than this, that preſcience only foreſeeth, providence foreſeeth and careth for, and hath reſpect to all creatures, and predeſtination is only of men; and yet not of all to men belonging, but of their ſalvation properly in the common uſe of divines; or perdition, as ſome have uſed it. Raleigh.

Nor can they juſtly accuſe
Their maker, or their making, or their fate;
As if predeſtination over-rul'd
Their will, diſpos'd by abſolute decree,
Or high fore knowledge. Milt. Par. Loſt.

PREDESTINA'TOR. n. ſ. [from predeſtinate.] One that holds predeſtination or the prevalence of pre-eſtabliſhed neceſſity.

Me, mine example let the Stoicks uſe,
Their ſad and cruel doctrine to maintain;
Let all predeſtinators me produce,
Who ſtruggle with eternal fate in vain. Cowley.

To PREDE'STINE. v. a. [præ and deſtine.] To decree beforehand.

Ye careful angels, whom eternal fate
Ordains on earth and human acts to wait,
Who turn with ſecret pow'r this reſtleſs ball,
And bid predeſtin'd empires riſe and fall. Prior.

PREDETERMINA'TION. n. ſ. [predetermination, Fr. præ and determination.] Determination made beforehand.

This predetermination of God's own will is ſo far from being the determining of ours, that it is diſtinctly the contrary; for ſuppoſing God to predetermine that I ſhall act freely; 'tis certain from thence that my will is free in reſpect of God, and not predetermined. Hammond's Fundamentals.

The truth of the catholick doctrine of all ages, in points of predetermination and irreſiſtability, ſtands in oppoſition to the Calviniſts. Hammond.

To PREDETE'RMINE. v. a. [præ and determine.] To doom or confine by previous decree.

We ſee in brutes certain ſenſible inſtincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty, whereby they are predetermined to the convenience of the ſenſible life. Hale.

PRE'DIAL. adj. [prædium, Lat.] Conſiſting of farms.

By the civil law, their predial eſtates are liable to fiſcal payments and taxes, as not being appropriated for the ſervice of divine worſhip, but for profane uſes. Ayliffe.

To have us make denial. Shakeſpeare.

Are you, in favour of his perſon, bent
Thus to prejudicate the innocent? Sandys.

PREJU'DICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by prejudice; formed before examination.

This rule of caſting away all our former prejudicate opinions, is not propoſed to any of us to be practiſed at once as ſubjects or chriſtians, but merely as philoſophers. Watts.

2. Prejudiced; prepoſſeſſed by opinions.

Their works will be embraced by moſt that underſtand them, and their reaſons enforce belief from prejudicate readers. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

PREJUDICA'TION. n. ſ. [from prejudicate.] The act of judging without examination.

PRE'JUDICE. n. ſ. [prejudice, Fr. prejudicium, Latin.]

1. Prepoſſeſſion; judgment formed beforehand without examination. It is uſed for prepoſſeſſion in favour of any thing or againſt it. It is ſometimes uſed with to before that which the prejudice is againſt, but not properly.

The king himſelf frequently conſidered more the perſon who ſpoke, as he was in his prejudice, than the council itſelf that was given. Clarendon.

My comfort is, that their manifeſt prejudice to my cauſe will render their judgment of leſs authority. Dryden.

There is an unaccountable prejudice to projectors of all kinds, for which reaſon, when I talk of practiſing to fly, ſilly people think me an owl for my pains. Addiſon.

2. Miſchief; detriment; hurt; injury. This ſenſe is only accidental or conſequential; a bad thing being called a prejudice, only becauſe prejudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not derived from the original or etymology of the word: it were therefore better to uſe it leſs: perhaps prejudice ought never to be applied to any miſchief, which does not imply ſome partiality or prepoſſeſſion. In ſome of the following examples its propriety will be diſcovered.

I have not ſpake one the leaſt word,
That might be prejudice of her preſent ſtate,
Or touch of her good perſon. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him ſome prejudice; for from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shak. Henry VIII.

Factions carried too high and too violently, is a ſign of weakneſs in princes, and much to the prejudice of their authority and buſineſs. Bacon.

How plain this abuſe is, and what prejudice it does to the underſtanding of the ſacred ſcriptures. Locke.

A prince of this character will inſtruct us by his example, to fix the unſteadineſs of our politicks; or by his conduct hinder it from doing us any prejudice. Addiſon.

To PRE'JUDICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prepoſſeſs with unexamined opinions; to fill with prejudices.

Half pillars wanted their expected height,
And roofs imperfect prejudic'd the ſight. Prior.

Suffer not any beloved ſtudy to prejudice your mind, ſo far as to deſpiſe all other learning. Watts.

2. To obſtruct or injure by prejudices previouſly raiſed.

Companies of learned men, be they never ſo great and reverend, are to yield unto reaſon; the weight whereof is no whit prejudiced by the ſimplicity of his perſon, which doth alledge it. Hooker.

Neither muſt his example, done without the book, prejudice that which is well appointed in the book. Whitgifte.

I am not to prejudice the cauſe of my fellow-poets, though I abandon my own defence. Dryden.

3. To injure; to hurt; to diminiſh; to impair; to be detrimental to. This ſenſe, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original ſenſe; who can read with patience of an ingredient that prejudices a medicine?

The ſtrength of that law is ſuch, that no particular nation can lawfully prejudice the ſame by any their ſeveral laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private reſolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hooker.

The Danube reſcu'd, and the empire ſav'd,
Say, is the majeſty of verſe retriev'd?
And would it prejudice thy ſofter vein,
To ſing the princes, Louis and Eugene? Prior.

To this is added a vinous bitter, warmer in the compoſition of its ingredients than the watry infuſion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of ſo grateful a flavour, the only care required in this compoſition was to chuſe ſuch an addition as might not prejudice it. London Diſpenſatory.

PREJUDI'CIAL. adj. [prejudiciable, Fr. from prejudice.]

1. Obſtructed by means of oppoſite prepoſſeſſions.

'Tis a ſad irreverence, without due conſideration to look upon the actions of princes with a prejudicial eye. Holyday.

2. Contrary; oppoſite.

What one ſyllable is there, in all this, prejudicial any way to that which we hold? Hooker.

3. Miſchievous; hurtful; injurious; detrimental. This ſenſe is improper. See PREJUDICE, noun and verb.

His going away the next morning with all his troops, was moſt prejudicial and moſt ruinous to the king's affairs. Clarendon.

One of the young ladies reads, while the others are at work; ſo that the learning of the family is not at all prejudicial to its manufactures. Addiſon.

A ſtate of great proſperity, as it expoſes us to various temptations, ſo it is often prejudicial to us, in that it ſwells the mind with undue thoughts. Atterbury.

PREJUDI'CIALNESS. n. ſ. [from prejudicial.] The ſtate of being prejudicial; miſchievouſneſs.

PRE'LACY. n. ſ. [from prelate.]

1. The dignity or poſt of a prelate or eccleſiaſtick of the higheſt order.

Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices; as that of the pontificate, a patriarchſhip, an archbiſhoprick and biſhoprick. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. Epiſcopacy; the order of biſhops.

The preſbyter, puff'd up with ſpiritual pride,
Shall on the necks of the lewd nobles ride,
His brethren damn, the civil power defy,
And parcel out republick prelacy. Dryden.

How many are there, that call themſelves proteſtants, who put prelacy and popery together as terms convertible? Swift.

3. Biſhops. Collectively.

Divers of the reverend prelacy, and other moſt judicious men, have eſpecially beſtowed their pains about the matter of juriſdiction. Hooker.

PRE'LATE. n. ſ. [prelat, Fr. prælatus, Lat.] An eccleſiaſtick of the higheſt order and dignity.

It beſeemed not the perſon of ſo grave a prelate, to be either utterly without counſel, as the reſt were, or in a common perplexity to ſhew himſelf alone ſecure. Hooker.

Hear him but reaſon in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wiſh
You would deſire the king were made a prelate. Shakeſpeare.

The archbiſhop of Vienna, a reverend prelate, ſaid one day to king Lewis XI. of France; Sir, your mortal enemy is dead, what time duke Charles of Burgundy was ſlain. Bacon.

Yet Munſter's prelate ever be accurſt,
In whom we ſeek the German faith in vain. Dry.

PRELA'TICAL. adj. [from prelate.] Relating to prelate or prelacy. Dict.

PRELA'TION. n. ſ. [prælatus, Lat.] Preference; ſetting of one above the other.

In caſe the father left only daughters, they equally ſucceeded as in co-partnerſhip, without any prelation or preference of the eldeſt daughter to a double portion. Hale.

PRE'LATURE. } n. ſ. [prælatura, Lat. pre-
PRE'LATURESHIP. } lature, Fr.] The ſtate or dignity of a prelate. Dict.

PRELE'CTION. n. ſ. [prælectio, Lat.] Reading; lecture; diſcourſe.

PRELIBA'TION. n. ſ. [from prælibo, Latin.] Taſte beforehand; effuſion previous to taſting.

The firm belief of this, in an innocent ſoul, is a high prelibation of thoſe eternal joys. More's D. D.

PRELI'MINARY. adj. [preliminaire, Fr. præ limine, Lat.] Previous; introductory; proemial.

My maſter needed not the aſſiſtance of that preliminary poet to prove his claim; his own majeſtick mien diſcovers him to be the king. Dryden.

PRELI'MINARY. n. ſ. Something previous; preparatory act; preparation; preparative.

The third conſiſts of the ceremonies of the oath on both ſides, and the preliminaries to the combat. Notes on Iliad.

PRE-

PRE'LUDE. n. ſ. [prelude, French; præludium, Latin.]

1. Some ſhort flight of muſick played before a full concert.

My weak eſſay
But ſounds a prelude, and points out their prey. Young.

2. Something introductory; ſomething that only ſhews what is to follow.

To his infant arms oppoſe
His father's rebels and his brother's foes;
Thoſe were the preludes of his fate,
That form'd his manhood, to ſubdue
The hydra of the many-headed hiſſing crew. Dryd.

The laſt Georgick was a good prelude to the Æneis, and very well ſhewed what the poet could do in the deſcription of what was really great. Addiſon.

One conceſſion to a man is but a prelude to another. Clariſſa.

To PRELU'DE. v. a. [preluder, French; præludo, Latin.] To ſerve as an introduction; to be previous to.

Either ſongſter holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes,
As if all day, preluding to the fight,
They only had rehears'd, to ſing by night. Dryden.

PRELU'DIOUS. adj. [from prelude.] Previous; introductory.

That's but a preludious bliſs,
Two ſouls pickeering in a kiſs. Cleaveland.

To greet me with premeditated welcomes. Shakeſp.
With words premeditated thus he ſaid. Dryden.

To PREME'DITATE. v. n. To have formed in the mind by previous meditation; to think beforehand.

Of themſelves they were rude, and knew not ſo much as how to premeditate; the ſpirit gave them ſpeech and eloquent utterance. Hooker's Eccl. Polity.

PREMEDITA'TION. n. ſ. [præmeditatio, Latin; premeditation, Fr. from premeditate.] Act of meditating beforehand.

Are all th' unlook'd-for iſſue of their bodies
To take their rooms ere I can place myſelf,
A cold premeditation for my purpoſe? Shakeſpeare.

Hope is a pleaſant premeditation of enjoyment, as when a dog expects, till his maſter has done picking of the bone. More's Antidote againſt Atheiſm.

He amidſt the diſadvantage of extempore againſt premeditation, diſpelled with eaſe and perfect clearneſs all the ſophiſms that had been brought againſt him. Fell.

Verſe is not the effect of ſudden thought; but this hinders not, that ſudden thought may be repreſented in verſe, ſince thoſe thoughts muſt be higher than nature can raiſe without premeditation. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

To PREME'RIT. v. a. [præmereor, Lat.] To deſerve before.

They did not forgive Sir John Hotham, who had ſo much premerited of them. King Charles.

PRE'MICES. n. ſ. [primitiæ, Lat. premices, Fr.] Firſt fruits.

A charger, yearly filled with fruits, was offered to the gods at their feſtivals, as the premices or firſt gatherings. Dryden.

PRE'MIER. adj. [French.] Firſt; chief.

The Spaniard challengeth the premier place, in regard of his dominions. Camden's Remains.

Thus families, like realms, with equal fate,
Are ſunk by premier miniſters of ſtate. Swift

To PREMI'SE. v. a. [præmiſſus, Lat.]

1. To explain previouſly; to lay down premiſes.

The apoſtle's diſcourſe here is an anſwer upon a ground taken; he premiſeth, and then infers. Burnet.

I premiſe theſe particulars, that the reader may know I enter upon it as a very ungraceful taſk. Addiſon.

2. To ſend before the time. Not in uſe.

O let the vile world end,
And the premiſed flames of the laſt day
Knit earth and heav'n together! Shak. Henry VI.

PRE'MISES. n. ſ. [præmiſſa, Lat. premiſſes, Fr.]

1. Propoſitions antecedently ſuppoſed or proved.

They infer upon the premiſes, that as great difference as commodiouſly may be, there ſhould be in all outward ceremonies between the people of God, and them which are not his people. Hooker.

This is ſo regular an inference, that whilſt the premiſes ſtand firm, it is impoſſible to ſhake the concluſion. Decay of Piety.

She ſtudy'd well the point, and found
Her foes concluſions were not ſound,
From premiſes erroneous brought,
And therefore the deduction's nought. Swift's M.

2. In low language, houſes or lands: as, I was upon the premiſes.

PRE'MISS. n. ſ. [premiſſum, Lat.] Antecedent propoſition. This word is rare in the ſingular.

They know the major or minor, which is implied, when you pronounce the other premiſs and the concluſion. Watts.

PRE'MIUM. n. ſ. [præmium, Lat.] Something given to invite a loan or a bargain.

No body cares to make loans upon a new project; whereas men never fail to bring in their money upon a land-tax, when the premium or intereſt allowed them is ſuited to the hazard they run. Addiſon's Freeholder.

People were tempted to lend, by great premiums and large intereſt; and it concerned them to preſerve that government, which they had truſted with their money. Swift's Miſcellanies.

To PREMO'NISH. v. a. [præmoneo, Lat.] To warn or admoniſh beforehand.

This man preſumes upon his parts, that they will not fail him at time of need, and ſo thinks it ſuperfluous labour to make any proviſion beforehand. Locke.

5. To make confident or arrogant attempts.

In this we fail to perform the thing, which God ſeeth meet, convenient and good; in that we preſume to ſee what is meet and convenient, better than God himſelf. Hooker.

God, to remove his ways from human ſenſe,
Plac'd heav'n from earth ſo far, that earthly ſight,
If it preſume, might err in things too high,
And no advantage gain. Milton's Par. Loſt.

6. It has on or upon ſometimes before the thing ſuppoſed.

He, that would not deceive himſelf, ought to build his hypotheſis on matter of fact, and not preſume on matter of fact, becauſe of his hypotheſis. Locke.

Luther preſumes upon the gift of continency. Atterbury.

7. It has of ſometimes, but not properly.

Preſuming of his force, with ſparkling eyes,
Already he devours the promis'd prize. Dryden.

PRESU'MER. n. ſ. [from preſume.] One that preſuppoſes; an arrogant perſon.

Heavy with ſome high minds is an overweight of obligation; otherwiſe great deſervers do grow intolerable preſumers. Wotton.

PRESU'MPTION. n. ſ. [præſumptus, Lat. preſomption, Fr.]

1. Suppoſition previouſly formed.

Thou haſt ſhewed us how unſafe it is to offend thee, upon preſumptions afterwards to pleaſe thee. King Charles.

Tho' men in general believed a future ſtate, yet they had but confuſed preſumptions of the nature and condition of it. Rogers.

2. Confidence grounded on any thing preſuppoſed: with upon.

A preſumption, upon this aid, was the principal motive for the undertaking. Clarendon.

Thoſe at home held their immoderate engroſſments of power by no other tenure, than their own preſumption upon the neceſſity of affairs. Swift.

3. An argument ſtrong, but not demonſtrative; a ſtrong probability.

The error and unſufficience of their arguments doth make it, on the contrary ſide againſt them, a ſtrong preſumption, that God hath not moved their hearts to think ſuch things, as he hath not enabled them to prove. Hooker.

4. Arrogance; confidence blind and adventurous; preſumptuouſneſs.

Let my preſumption not provoke thy wrath;
For I am ſorry, that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art. Shakeſpeare.

It warns a warier carriage in the thing,
Leſt blind preſumption work their ruining. Daniel.

I had the preſumption to dedicate to you a very unfiniſhed piece. Dryden.

5. Unreaſonable confidence of divine favour.

The awe of his majeſty will keep us from preſumption, and the promiſes of his mercy from deſpair. Rogers.

PRESU'MPTIVE. adj. [preſomptive, Fr. from preſume.]

1. Taken by previous ſuppoſition.

We commonly take ſhape and colour for ſo preſumptive ideas of ſeveral ſpecies, that, in a good picture, we readily ſay this is a lion, and that a roſe. Locke.

2. Supposed: as, the presumptive heir: opposed to the heir apparent.

3. Confident; arrogant; presumptuous.

There being two opinions repugnant to each other, it may not be presumptive or sceptical to doubt of both. Brown.

PRESU'MPTUOUS. adj. [presumptueux, presumptuous, Fr.]

1. Arrogant; confident; insolent.

Presumptuous priest, this place commands my patience. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

I follow him not
With any token of presumptuous suit;
Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him. Sh.

The boldness of advocates prevail with judges; whereas they should imitate God, who represseth the presumptuous, and giveth grace to the modest. Bacon's Essays.

Their minds somewhat rais'd
By false presumptuous hope. Milton.

It being not the part of a presumptuous, but of a truly humble man to do what he is bidden, and to please those whom he is bound in duty to obey. Kettlewell.

Some will not venture to look beyond received notions of the age, nor have so presumptuous a thought, as to be wiser than their neighbours. Locke.

2. Irreverent with respect to holy things.

The sins whereinto he falleth, are not presumptuous; but are ordinarily of weakness and infirmity. Perkins.

Thus I presumptuous: and the vision bright,
As with a smile more brighten'd, thus reply'd. Milton.

The pow'rs incens'd
Punish'd his presumptuous pride,
That for his daring enterprize she dy'd. Dryden.

Can'st thou love
Presumptuous Crete, that boasts the tomb of Jove. Pope.

PRESU'MPTUOUSLY. adv. [from presumptuous.]

1. Arrogantly; confidently.

2. Irreverently.

Do you, who study nature's works, decide,
Whilst I the dark mysterious cause admire;
Nor, into what the gods conceal, presumptuously enquire. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

3. With vain and groundless confidence in divine favour.

I entreat your prayers, that God will keep me from all premature persuasion of my being in Christ, and not suffer me to go on presumptuously or desperately in any course. Hammond.

PRESU'MPTUOUSNESS. n. s. [from presumptuous.] Quality of being presumptuous; confidence; irreverence.

PRESUPPO'SAL. n. s. [præ and supposal.] Supposal previously formed.

All things necessary to be known that we may be saved, but known with presupposal of knowledge concerning certain principles, whereof it receiveth us already persuaded. Hooker.

To PRESUPPO'SE. v. a. [presupposer, Fr. præ and suppose.] To suppose as previous, to imply as antecedent.

In as much as righteous life presupposeth life, in as much as to live virtuously it is impossible except we live; the first impediment, which we endeavour to remove, is penury and want of things without which we cannot live. Hooker.

All kinds of knowledge have their certain bounds; each of them presupposeth many necessary things learned in other sciences, and known beforehand. Hooker.

PRESUPPOSI'TION. n. s. [presupposition, Fr. præ and supposition.] Supposition previously formed.

PRESURMI'SE. n. s. [præ and surmise.] Surmise previously formed.

It was your presurmise,
That, in the dole of blows, your son might drop. Shakespeare.

PRETE'NCE. n. s. [prætensus, Lat.]

1. A false argument grounded upon fictitious postulates.

This pretence against religion will not only be baffled, but we shall gain a new argument to persuade men over. Tillotson.

2. The act of showing or alleging what is not real; shew; appearance.

With flying speed and seeming great pretence
Came running in a messenger. Spenser.

So strong his appetite was to those executions he had been accustomed to in Ireland, without any kind of commission or pretence of authority. Clarendon.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince. Dry.

I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence. Wake.

3. Assumption; claim to notice.

Despise not these few ensuing pages; for never was any thing of this pretence more ingenuously imparted. Evelyn.

4. Claim true or false.

Spirits on our just pretences arm'd
Fell with us. Milton.

O worthy not of liberty alone,
Too mean pretence, but honour. Milton.

Primogeniture cannot have any pretence to a right of solely inheriting property or power. Locke.

5. Shakespeare uses this word with more affinity to the original Latin, for something threatened, or held out to terrify.

I have conceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shakespeare.

In the great hand of God I stand, and thence Against the undivulg'd pretence I fight
Of treas'nous malice. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He hath writ this to feel my affection for your honour, and to no other pretence of danger. Shakes.

To PRETE'ND. v. a. [prætendo, Lat. pretendre, French.]

1. To hold out; to stretch forward. This is mere Latinity, and not used, perhaps it should be protends.

Lucagus, to lash his horses, bends
Prone to the wheels, and his left foot pretends. Dry.

2. To make any appearance of having; to alledge falsely.

This let him know,
Lest wilfully transgressing he pretend Surprisal. Milton.

What reason then can any man pretend against religion, when it is so apparently for the benefit, not only of human society, but of every particular person. Tillotson.

3. To show hypocritically.

'Tis their interest to guard themselves from those riotous effects of pretended zeal, nor is it less their duty. Decay of Piety.

4. To hold out as a delusive appearance; to exhibit as a cover of something hidden. This is rather Latin.

Warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heav'nly form pretended
To hellish falsehood, snare them, Milton's Par. Lost.

5. To claim. In this sense we rather say, pretend to.

Chiefs shall be grudg'd the part which they pretend. Dryden.

Are they not rich? what more can they pretend? Pope.

To PRETE'ND. v. n.

1. To put in a claim truly or falsely. It is seldom used without shade of censure.

What peace can be, where both to one pretend?
But they more diligent, and we more strong. Dry.

In those countries that pretend to freedom, princes are subject to those laws which their people have chosen. Swift.

2. To presume on ability to do any thing; to profess presumptuously.

Of the ground of redness in this sea are we not fully satisfied? for there is another red sea, whose name we pretend not to make out from these principles. Brown.

PRETE'NDER. n. s. [from pretend.] One who lays claim to any thing.

The prize was disputed only till you were seen; now all pretenders have withdrawn their claims. Dryden.

Whatever victories the several pretenders to the empire obtained over one another, they are recorded on coins without the least reflection. Addis.

The numerous pretenders to places would never have been kept in order, if expectation had been cut off. Swift.

To just contempt ye vain pretenders fall,
The people's fable and the scorn of all. Pope.

Pretenders to philosophy or good sense grow fond of this sort of learning. Watts.

PRETE'NDINGLY. adv. [from pretending.] Arrogantly; presumptuously.

PRE'TERITNESS. n. s. [from preterit.] State of being past; not presence; not futurity.

We cannot conceive a preteritness still backwards in infinitum, that never was present, as we can an endless futurity, that never will be present; so that though one is potentially infinite, yet nevertheless the other is positively finite: and this reasoning doth not at all affect the eternal existence of the adorable divinity, in whose invariable nature there is no past nor future. Bentley's Sermons.

PRETERLA'PSED. adj. [preterlapsus, Lat.] Past and-gone.

We look with a superstitious reverence upon the accounts of preterlapsed ages. Glanville's Scepsis.

Never was there so much of either, in any preterlapsed age, as in this. Walker.

PRETERLE'GAL. adj. [preter and legal.] Not agreeable to law.

I expected some evil customs preterlegal, and abuses personal, had been to be removed. King Charles.

PRETERMI'SSION. n. s. [pretermission, Fr. prætermissio, Lat.] The act of omitting.

To PRETERMI'T. v. a. [prætermitto, Lat.] To pass by.

The fees, that are termly given to these deputies, for recompence of their pains, I do purposely pretermit; because they be not certain. Bacon.

PRETERNATU'RAL. adj. [præter and natural.] Different from what is natural; irregular.

We will enquire into the cause of this vile and preternatural temper of mind, that should make a man please himself with that, which can no ways reach those faculties, which nature has made the proper seat of pleasure. South's Sermons.

That form, which the earth is under at present, is preternatural, like a statue made and broken again. Burnet.

PRE'TERNATURALLY. adv. [from preternatural.] In a manner different from the common order of nature.

Simple air, preternaturally attenuated by heat, will will make itself room, and break and blow up all that which resisteth it. Bacon's Natural History.

PRE'TERNATURALNESS. n. s. [from preternatural.] Manner different from the order of nature.

PRE'TERPERFECT. adj. [præterium perfectum, Lat.] A grammatical term applied to the tense which denotes time absolutely past.

The same natural aversion to loquacity has of late made a considerable alteration in our language, by closing in one syllable the termination of our preterperfect tense, as drown'd, walk'd, for drowned, walked. Addison's Spectator.

PRE'TERPLUPERFECT. adj. [præterium plusquam perfectum, Lat.] The grammatical epithet for the tense denoting time relatively past or past before some other past time.

PRETE'XT. n. s. [prætextus, Lat. pretexte, Fr.] Pretence; false appearance; false allegation.

How prettily the young swains seems to wash
The hand was fair before. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

One saith prettily; in the quenching of the flame of a pestilent ague, nature is like people that come to quench the fire of a house; so busy, as one letteth another. Bacon.

Children, kept out of ill company, take a pride to behave themselves prettily, after the fashion of others. Locke.

PRE'TTINESS. n. s. [from pretty.] Beauty without dignity; neat elegance without elevation.

There is goodliness in the bodies of animals, as in the ox, greyhound, and stag; or majesty and stateliness, as in the lion, horse, eagle and cock; grave awfulness, as in mastiffs; or elegancy and prettiness, as in lesser dogs and most sort of birds; all which are several modes of beauty. More.

Those drops of prettiness, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to defecate and exalt our conceptions, not to inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

PRE'TTY. adj. [præt, finery, Sax. pretto, Ital. prat, prattigh, Dutch.]

1. Neat; elegant; pleasing without surprise or elevation.

Of these the idle Greeks have many pretty tales. Raleigh.

They found themselves involved in a train of mistakes, by taking up some pretty hypothesis in philosophy. Watts.

2. Beautiful without grandeur or dignity

The pretty gentleman is the most complaisant creature in the world, and is always of my mind. Spectator.

3. It is used in a kind of diminutive contempt in poetry, and in conversation: as, a pretty fellow indeed!

Britain's sea-chiefs by Anna's high command,
Resistless o'er the Thuscan billows ride. Blackmore.

Thus song could prevail
O'er death and o'er hell,
A conquest how hard and how glorious;
Though fate had fast bound her
With Styx nine-times round her,
Yet musick and love were victorious. Pope.

This kingdom could never prevail against the united power of England. Swift.

3. To gain influence; to operate effectually.

I do not pretend that these arguments are demonstrations of which the nature of this thing is not capable: but they are such strong probabilities, as ought to prevail with all those who are not able to produce greater probabilities to the contrary. Wilkins.

4. To persuade or induce. It has with, upon or on before the person persuaded.

With minds obdurate nothing prevaileth, as well they that preach, as they that read unto such, shall still have cause to complain with the prophets of old, who will give credit unto our teaching? Hooker.

He was prevailed with to restrain the earl of Bristol upon his first arrival. Clarendon.

The serpent with me
Persuasively hath so prevail'd, that I
Have also tasted. Milton.

They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under the conduct of a guide, that it is an hundred to one will mislead them, than he that has not yet taken a step, and is likelier to be prevailed on to enquire after the right way. Locke.

There are four sorts of arguments that men, in their reasonings with others, make use of to prevail on them. Locke.

The gods pray
He would resume the conduct of the day,
Nor let the world be lost in endless night;
Prevail'd upon at last, again he took
The harness'd steeds, that still with horror shook. Addison.

Upon assurances of revolt, the queen was prevailed with to send her forces upon that expedition. Swift.

Prevail upon some judicious friend to be your constant hearer, and allow him the utmost freedom. Swift.

PREVA'ILING. adj. [from prevail.] Predominant; having most influence; having great power; prevalent; efficacious.

Probabilities, which cross men's appetites and prevailing passions, run the same fate: let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh. Locke.

Save the friendless infants from oppression;
Saints shall assist thee with prevailing prayers,
And warring angels combat on thy side. Rowe.

PREVA'ILMENT. n. s. [from prevail.] Prevalence.

Messengers
Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth. Shakesp.

Mine eyes prevent the night-watches, that I might be occupied in thy words. Pſ. cxix. 4.

The ſame officer told us, he came to conduct us, and that he had prevented the hour, becauſe we ought have the whole day before us for our buſineſs. Bacon.

Nothing engendred doth prevent his meat:
Flies have their tables ſpread, ere they appear;
Some creatures have in winter what to eat;
Others do ſleep. Herbert's Temple of Sacred Poems.

3. To anticipate.

Soon ſhalt thou find, if thou but arm their hands,
Their ready guilt preventing thy commands;
Could'ſt thou ſome great proportion'd miſchief frame,
They'd prove the father from whoſe loins they came. Pope.

4. To preoccupy; to preengage; to attempt firſt.

Thou haſt prevented us with overtures of love, even when we were thine enemies. King Charles.

5. To hinder; to obviate; to obſtruct. This is now almoſt the only ſenſe.

PRIVA'TION. n. s. [privation, French; privatio, Latin.]

1. Removal or destruction of any thing or quality.

For, what is this contagious sin of kind,
But a privation of that grace within? Davies.

If the privation be good, it follows not the former condition was evil, but less good; for the flower or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.

So bounded are our natural desires,
That wanting all, and setting pain aside,
With bare privation sense is satisfy'd, Dryden.

After some account of good, evil will be known by consequence, as being only a privation or absence of good. South.

A privation is the absence of what does naturally belong to the thing, or which ought to be present with it; as when a man or horse is deaf or dead, or a physician or divine unlearned; these are privations. Watts's Logick.

Sir Valentine
This night intends to steal away your daughter;
Myself am one made privy to the plot. Shakes.

Many being privy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel.

He would rather lose half of his kingdom, than be privy to such a secret, which he commanded me never to mention. Swift.

PRI'VY. n. s. Place of retirement; necessary house.

Your fancy
Would still the same ideas give ye,
As when you spy'd her on the privy. Swift.

PRIZE. n. s. [prix, Fr.]

1. A reward gained by contest with competitors.

If ever he go alone, I'll never wrestle for prize. Shakespeare.

Though their foe were big and strong, and often brake the ring,

I fought and conquer'd, yet have lost the prize. Dr.

The raising such silly competitions among the ignorant, proposing prizes for such useless accomplishments, and inspiring them with such absurd ideas of superiority, has in it something immoral as well as ridiculous. Addison.

They are not indeed suffered to dispute with us the proud prizes of arts and sciences, of learning and elegance, in which, I have much suspicion they would often prove our superiors. Law.

2. A reward gained by any performance.

True poets empty fame and praise despise,
Fame is the trumpet, but your smile the prize. Dr.

3. [Prise, Fr.] Something taken by adventure; plunder.

The king of Scots she did send to France,
To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings,
And make his chronicle as rich with prize,
As is the ouzy bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck. Shakes. Henry V.

Age that all men overcomes, has made his prize on thee. Chapman.

He acquitted himself like a valiant, but not like an honest man; for he converted the prizes to his own use. Arbuthnot.

Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes
Soon to obtain and long possess the prize. Pope.

To PRIZE. v. a. [from appraiser; priser, Fr. appreciare, Lat.]

1. To rate; to value at a certain price.

Life I prize not a straw; but for mine honour
Which I would free. Shakespeare.

A goodly price that I was prized at of them. Zec.

2. To esteem; to value highly.

I go to free us both of pain;
I prize'd your person, but your crown disdain. Dry.

PRO. [Latin.] For; in defence of; pro and con, for pro and contra, for and against. Despicable cant.

Doctrinal points in controversy had been agitated in the pulpits, with more warmth than had used to be; and thence the animosity increased in books pro and con. Clarendon.

Matthew met Richard, when
Of many knotty points they spoke,
And pro and con by turns they took. Prior.

PROBABI'LITY. n. s. [probabilitas, Lat. probabilité, Fr. from probable.] Likelihood; appearance of truth; evidence arising from the preponderation of argument: it is less than moral certainty.

Probability is the appearance of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of proofs, whose connection is not constant; but appears for the most part to be so. Locke.

As for probabilities, what thing was there ever set down so agreeable with sound reason, but some probable shew against it might be made? Hooker's Preface.

The reason why men are moved to believe a probability of gain by adventuring their stocks into such foreign countries as they have never seen, and of

of which they have made no trial, is from the teſtimony of other credible perſons. Wilkins.

If a truth be certain, and thwart intereſt, it will quickly fetch it down to but a probability; nay, if it does not carry with it an impregnable evidence, it will go near to debaſe it to a downright falſity. South.

Though moral certainty be ſometimes taken for a high degree of probability, which can only produce a doubtful aſſent; yet it is alſo frequently uſed for a firm aſſent to a thing upon ſuch grounds as fully ſatisfy a prudent man. Tillotſon.

For a perpetual motion, magnetical virtues are not without ſome ſtrong probabilities of proving effectual. Wilkins.

Which tempers, if they were duly improved by proper ſtudies, and ſober methods of education, would in all probability carry them to greater heights of piety, than are to be found amongſt the generality of men. Law.

PRO'BABLE. adj. [probable, French; probabilis, Latin.] Likely; having more evidence than the contrary.

The publick approbation, given by the body of this whole church unto thoſe things which are eſtabliſhed, doth make it but probable that they are good, and therefore unto a neceſſary proof that they are not good it muſt give place. Hooker.

The only ſeaſonable inquiry is, which is of probables the moſt, or of improbables the leaſt ſuch. Hammond.

I do not ſay, that the principles of religion are merely probable; I have before aſſerted them to be morally certain. And that to a man who is careful to preſerve his mind free from prejudice, and to conſider, they will appear unqueſtionable, and the deductions from them demonſtrable. Wilkins.

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought againſt it. South.

They aſſented to things that were neither evident nor certain, but only probable; for they converſed, they merchandized upon a probable perſuaſion of the honeſty and truth of thoſe whom they correſponded with. South.

PRO'BABLY. adv. [from probable.] Likely; in likelihood.

Diſtinguiſh betwixt what may poſſibly, and what will probably be done. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

PROBA'TIONER. n. ſ. [from probation.]

1. One who is upon trial.

Hear a mortal muſe thy praiſe rehearſe,
In no ignoble verſe;
But ſuch as thy own verſe did practiſe here,
When thy firſt fruits of poeſy were giv'n,
To make thyſelf a welcome inmate there;
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

Build a thouſand churches, where theſe probationers may read their wall lectures. Swift.

2. A novice.

This root of bitterneſs was but a probationer in the ſoil; and though it ſet forth ſome offſets to preſerve its kind, yet Satan was fain to cheriſh them. Decay of Piety.

PROBA'TIONERSHIP. n. ſ. [from probationer.] State of being a probationer; noviciate.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability, ſuitable to that ſtate of mediocrity and probationerſhip he has been pleaſed to place us in here, wherein to check our over-confidence. Locke.

PRO'BATORY. adj. [from probo, Lat.] Serving for trial.

Job's afflictions were no vindicatory puniſhments, but probatory chaſtiſements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

PROBATUM EST. A Latin expreſſion added to the end of a receipt, ſignifying it is tried or proved.

Vain the concern that you expreſs,
That uncall'd Alard will poſſeſs
Your houſe and coach both day and night,
And that Macbeth was haunted leſs
By Banquo's reſtleſs ſprite:
Lend him but fifty louis d'or,
And you ſhould never ſee him more;
Take my advice probatum eſt.
Why do the gods indulge our ſtore,
But to ſecure our reſt? Prior.

PROBE. n. ſ. [from probo, Lat.] A ſlender wire by which ſurgeons ſearch the depth of wounds.

One and the same proem, containing a general motive to provoke people to obedience of all and every one of these precepts, was prefixed before the decalogue. White.

So gloz'd the tempter, and his proem tun'd. Mil.

Thus much may serve by way of proem,
Proceed we therefore to our poem. Swift's Misc.

Justinian has, in the proem to the digests, only prefixed the term of five years for studying the laws. Ayliffe.

PROFANA'TION. n. s. [profanation, Fr. from profano, Lat.]

1. The act of violating any thing sacred.

He knew how bold men are to take even from God himself; how hardly that house would be kept from impious profanation he knew. Hooker.

What I am and what I would, are to your ears divinity; to any others, profanation. Shakespeare.

'Twere profanation of our joys,
To tell the laity our love. Donne.

Profanation of the Lord's day, and of other solemn festival days, which are devoted to divine and religious offices, is impious. White.

All profanation and invasion of things sacred, is an offence against the eternal law of nature. South.

Others think I ought not to have translated Chaucer: they suppose a veneration due to his old language, and that it is little less than profanation and sacrilege to alter it. Dryden.

2. Irreverence to holy things or persons.

Great men may jest with saints, 'tis wit in them;
But, in the less, foul profanation. Shakespeare.

PROFA'NE. adj. [profane, Fr. from profanus, Latin.]

1. Irreverent to sacred names or things.

Profane fellow!
Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more
But what art thou besides, thou wert too base
To be his groom. Shakes. Cymbaline.

These have caused the weak to stumble, and the profane to blaspheme, offending the one, and hardening the other. South.

2. Not sacred; secular.

The universality of the deluge is attested by profane history; for the fame of it is gone through the earth, and there are records or traditions concerning it in all the parts of this and the new found world. Burnet's Theory.

3. Polluted; not pure.

Nothing is profane that serveth to holy things. Raleigh.

4. Not purified by holy rites.

Far hence be souls profane,
The Sibyl cry'd, and from the grove abstain. Dry.

To PROFA'NE. v. a. [profano, Lat. profaner, Fr.]

1. To violate; to pollute

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profaning this most honourable order. Shakesp.

Pity the temple profaned of ungodly men. Mac.

Foretasted fruit
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first
Made common and unhallow'd. Milton.

How far have we
Profan'd thy heav'nly gift of poesy?
Made prostitute and profligate the muse,
Debas'd. Dryden.

How are festivals profaned? When they are not regarded, nor distinguished from common days; when they are made instruments of vice and vanity; when they are spent in luxury and debauchery; when our joy degenerates into sensuality, and we express it by intemperance and excess. Nelson.

2. To put in wrong use.

I feel me much to blame,
So idly to profane the precious time. Shakespeare.

PROFA'NELY. adv. [from profane.] With irreverence to sacred names or things.

I will hold my tongue no more, as touching their wickedness, which they profanely commit. 2 Esdr.

Let none of things serious, much less of divine,
When belly and head's full, profanely dispute. Ben Jonson.

That proud scholar, intending to erect altars to Virgil, speaks of Homer too profanely. Broome.

PROFA'NER. n. s. [from profane.] Polluter; violater.

The argument which our Saviour useth against profaners of the temple, he taketh from the use whereunto it was with solemnity consecrated. Hooker.

Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace,
Profaners of this neighbour stained steel. Shakes.

There are a lighter ludicrous sort of profaners, who use the scripture to furnish out their jests. Government of the Tongue.

PROFA'NENESS. n. s. [from profane.] Irreverence of what is sacred.

Apollo, pardon
My great profaneness 'gainst the oracle! Shakes.

But Purbeck, as profest a huntress and a nun,
The wide and wealthy sea, nor all his pow'r respects. Drayton.

3. To declare friendship. Not in use.

As he does conceive,
He is dishonour'd by a man, which ever
Profess'd to him; why, his revenges must
In that be made more bitter. Shakespeare.

PROFE'SSEDLY. adv. [from professed.] According to open declaration made by himself.

I could not grant too much to men, that being professedly my subjects, pretended religious strictness. King Charles.

Virgil, whom he professedly imitated, has surpassed him among the Romans. Dry. Dedic. to Fuv.

England I travelled over, professedly searching all places I passed along. Woodward.

PROFE'SSION. n. s. [profession, Fr. from profess.]

1. Calling; vocation; known employment. The term profession is particularly used of divinity, physick, and law.

I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than
Your high profession spiritual. Shakes. Henry VIII.

If we confound arts with the abuse of them, we shall condemn all honest trades; for there are that deceive in all professions, and bury in forgetfulness all knowledge. Raleigh.

Some of our profession keep wounds tented. Wiseman.

No other one race, not the sons of any one other profession, not perhaps altogether, are so much scattered amongst all professions, as the sons of clergymen. Spratt's Sermons.

This is a practice, in which multitudes, besides those of the learned professions, may be engaged. Watts.

2. Declaration.

A naked profession may have credit, where no other evidence can be given. Glanville's Scepsis.

The professions of princes, when a crown is the bait, are a slender security. Lesley.

Most profligately false, with the strongest professions of sincerity. Swift.

3. The act of declaring one's self of any party or opinion.

For by oil in their lamps, and the first lighting of them, which was common to them both, is meant that solemn profession of faith and repentance, which all christians make in baptism. Tillots.

When christianity came to be taken up, for the sake of those civil encouragements which attended their profession, the complaint was applicable to christians. Swift.

PROFE'SSIONAL. adj. [from profession.] Relating to a particular calling or profession.

Professional, as well as national, reflections are to be avoided. Clarissa.

PROFE'SSOR. n. s. [professeur, Fr. from profess.]

1. One who declares himself of any opinion or party.

When the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed you may doubt the springing up of a new sect. Bacon's Essays.

The whole church of professors at Philippi to whom he writes, was not made up wholly of the elect, sincere, and preserving christians, but like the net, in Christ's parable, that caught both good and bad, and had no doubt some insincere persons, hypocrites, and temporaries in it. Hammond.

2. One who publickly practises or teaches an art. Professors in most sciences, are generally the worst qualified to explain their meanings to those who are not of their tribes. Swift.

Thoſe to whom he entruſted the promulgating of the goſpel, had far different inſtructions. Dec. Piety.

It is certain laws, by virtue of any ſanction they receive from the promulgated will of the legiſlature, reach not a ſtranger, if by the law of nature every man hath not a power to puniſh offences againſt it. Locke.

PROMULGA'TION. n. ſ. [promulgatio, Lat. from promulgate.] Publication; open exhibition.

The ſtream and current of this rule hath gone as far, it hath continued as long as the very promulgation of the goſpel. Hooker.

External promulgation, or ſpeaking thereof, did not alter the ſame, in reſpect of the inward form or quality. White.

The very promulgation of the puniſhment will be part of the puniſhment, and anticipate the execution. South.

PROMULGA'TOR. n. ſ. [from promulgate.] Publiſher; open teacher.

How groundleſs a calumny this is, appears from the ſanctity of the Chriſtian religion, which excludes fraud and falſehood; ſo alſo from the deſignments and aims of its firſt promulgators. Decay of Piety.

To PROMU'LGE. v. a. [from promulgo, Lat.] To promulgate; to publiſh; to teach openly.

The chief deſign of them is, to eſtabliſh the truth of a new revelation in thoſe countries, where it is firſt promulged and propagated. Atterbury.

PROMU'LGER. n. ſ. [from promulge.] Publiſher; promulgator.

The promulgers of our religion, Jeſus Chriſt and his apoſtles, raiſed men and women from the dead, not once only, but often. Atterbury.

PRONA'TOR. n. ſ. In anatomy, a muſcle of the radius, of which there are two, that help to turn the palm downwards. Dict.

PRONE. adj. [pronus, Lat.]

1. Bending downward: not erect.

There wanted yet a creature not prone,
And brute as other creatures, but indu'd
With ſanctity of reaſon, might erect
His ſtature, and upright with front ſerene Govern the reſt. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

2. Lying with the face downwards: contrary to ſupine.

Upon theſe three poſitions in man, wherein the ſpine can only be at right lines with the thigh, ariſe thoſe poſtures, prone, ſupine and erect. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. Precipitous; headlong; going downwards.

Down thither prone in flight
He ſpeeds, and through the vaſt ethereal ſky
Sails between worlds. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

4. Declivous, ſloping.

Since the floods demand,
For their deſcent, a prone and ſinking land:
Does not this due declivity declare
A wiſe director's providential care? Blackmore.

5. Inclined; propenſe; diſpoſed. It has commonly an ill ſenſe.

The labour of doing good, with the pleaſure ariſing from the contrary, doth make men for the moſt part ſlower to the one and prone to the other, than that duty, preſcribed them by law, can prevail ſufficiently with them. Hooker.

Thoſe who are ready to confeſs him in judgment and profeſſion, are very prone to deny him in their doings. South.

If we are prone to ſedition, and delight in change, there is no cure more proper than trade, which ſupplies buſineſs to the active, and wealth to the indigent. Addiſon.

Still prone to change, though ſtill the ſlaves of ſtate. Pope.

PRO'NENESS. n. ſ. [from prone.]

1. The ſtate of bending downwards; not erectneſs.

If erectneſs be taken, as it is largely oppoſed unto pronneſs, or the poſture of animals looking downwards, carrying their venters, or oppoſite part to the ſpine, directly towards the earth, it may admit of queſtion. Brown's Vul. Err.

2. The ſtate of lying with the face downwards; not ſupineneſs.

3. Deſcent; declivity.

4. Inclination; propenſion; diſpoſition to ill.

The holy ſpirit ſaw that mankind is unto virtue hardly drawn, and that righteouſneſs is the leſs accounted of, by reaſon of the proneneſs of our affections to that which delighteth. Hooker.

The ſoul being firſt from nothing brought,
When God's grace fails her, doth to nothing fall;
And this declining proneneſs unto nought,
Is ev'n that ſin that we are born withal. Davies.

He inſtituted this worſhip, becauſe of the carnality of their hearts, and the proneneſs of the people to idolatry. Tillotſon.

The proneneſs of good men to commiſerate want, in whatever ſhape it appears. Atterbury.

How great is the proneneſs of our nature, to comply with this temptation! Rogers.

PRONG. n. ſ. [prongben, Dutch, to ſqueeze. Minſhew.] A fork.

The cooks made no more ado, but ſlicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys's Journey.

Whacum his ſea-coal prong threw by,
And baſely turn'd his back to fly. Hudibras.

Be mindful,
With iron teeth of rakes and prongs to move
The cruſted earth. Dryden's Virg. Georg.

She
So good a lady, that no tongue could e'er
Pronounce diſhonour of her. Shakeſ. Henry VIII.

I have pronounc'd the word, ſaith the Lord. Jer.

So was his will
Pronounc'd among the gods. Milton.

Sternly he pronounc'd the rigid interdiction. Milton.

Abſalom pronounced a ſentence of death againſt his brother. Locke.

3. To form or articulate by the organs of ſpeech.

Language of man pronounc'd
By tongue of brute, and human ſenſe expreſs'd. Milton.

Though diverſity of tongues continue, this would render the pronouncing them eaſier. Holder.

4. To utter rhetorically.

To PRONOU'NCE. v. n. To ſpeak with confidence or authority.

How confidently ſoever men pronounce of themſelves, and believe that they are then moſt pious, when they are moſt eager and unquiet; yet 'tis ſure this is far removed from the true genius of religion. Decay of Piety.

Every fool may believe, and pronounce confidently; but wiſe men will, in matters of diſcourſe, conclude firmly, and in matters of fact act ſurely. South's Sermons.

PRONOU'NCER. n. ſ. [from pronounce.] One who pronounces.

The pronouncer thereof ſhall be condemned in expences. Ayliffe's Parergon.

PRONUNCIA'TION. n. ſ. [pronunciatio, from pronuncio, Lat. pronunciation, Fr.]

1. The act or mode of utterance.

The deſign of ſpeaking being to communicate our thoughts by ready, eaſy, and graceful pronunciation, all kinds of letters have been ſearched out, that were ſerviceable for the purpoſe. Holder.

It were eaſy to produce thouſands of his verſes, which are lame for want of half a foot, ſometimes a whole one, and which no pronunciation can make otherwiſe. Dryden.

2. That part of rhetorick which teaches to ſpeak in publick with pleaſing utterance and graceful geſture.

PROOF. n. ſ. [from prove.]

1. Evidence; teſtimony; convincing token; convincing argument; means of conviction.

That they all have always ſo teſtified, I ſee not how we ſhould poſſibly wiſh a proof more palpable than this. Hooker.

This has neither evidence of truth, nor proof ſufficient to give it warrant. Hooker.

Though the manner of their trials ſhould be altered, yet the proof of every thing muſt needs be by the teſtimony of ſuch perſons as the parties ſhall produce. Spenſer.

That which I ſhall report will bear no credit,
Were not the proof ſo high. Shakeſpeare.

One ſoul in both, whereof good proof
This day affords. Milton.

Things of ſeveral kinds may admit and require ſeveral ſorts of proofs, all which may be good in their kind. And therefore nothing can be more irrational than for a man to doubt of, or deny the truth of any thing, becauſe it cannot be made out, by ſuch kind of proofs of which the nature of ſuch a thing is not capable. They ought not to expect either ſenſible proof, or demonſtration of ſuch matters as are not capable of ſuch proofs, ſuppoſing them to be true. Wilkins.

This, vers'd in death, th' infernal knight relates,
And then for proof fulfill'd their common fates.
Dryd. n.

Thoſe intervening ideas, which ſerve to ſhew the agreement of any two others, are called proofs. Locke.

2. Teſt; trial; experiment.

Retire or taſte thy folly, and learn by proof,
Hell-born! not to contend with ſpirits of heav'n. Milton.

Sampſon,
This day to Dagon is a ſolemn feaſt,
Thy ſtrength they know ſurpaſſing human race,
And

And now ſome publick proof thereof require
To honour this great feaſt. Milton's Agoniſtes.

When the imagination hath contrived the frame of ſuch an inſtrument, and conceives that the event muſt infallibly anſwer its hopes, yet then does it ſtrangely deceive in the proof. Wilkins.

Gave, while he taught, and edify'd the more,
Becauſe he ſhew'd by proof, 'twas eaſy to be poor.
Dryden.

My paper gives a timorous writer an opportunity of putting his abilities to the proof. Addiſon.

Here for ever muſt I ſtay,
Sad proof how well a lover can obey. Pope.

3. Firm temper; impenetrability; the ſtate of being wrought and hardened, till the expected ſtrength is found by trial to be attained.

Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy bleſſings ſteel my lance's point.
Shakeſpeare.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms,
Keen be my ſabre, and of proof my arms;
I aſk no other bleſſing of my ſtars. Dryden.

See arms of proof, both for myſelf and thee,
Chuſe thou the beſt. Dryden.

4. Armour hardened till it will abide a certain trial.

He Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

5. In printing, the rough draught of a ſheet when firſt pulled.

PROOF. adj. [This word, though uſed as an adjective, is only elliptically put for of proof.]

1. Impenetrable; able to reſiſt.

Now put your ſhields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than ſhields. Shak ſp.

Opportunity I here have had
To try thee, ſift thee, and confeſs have found thee
Proof againſt all temptation, as a rock
Of adamant. Milton's Paradiſe Regained

He paſt expreſſion lov'd,
Proof to diſdain, and not to be remov'd. Dryden.

When the mind is thoroughly tinctured, the man will be proof againſt all oppoſitions. Collier.

Guiltleſs of hate, and proof againſt deſire;
That all things weighs, and nothing can admire
Dryden.

When a capuchin thought proof againſt bribes, had undertaken to carry on the work, he died a little after. Addiſon

2. It has either to or againſt before the power to be reſiſted.

Imagin'd wife,
Conſtant, mature, proof againſt all aſſaults. Milt.

Deep in the ſnowy Alps, a lump of ice
By froſt was harden'd to a mighty price;
Proof to the ſun it now ſecurely lies,
And the warm dog-ſtar's hotteſt rage defies.
Addiſon.

The God of day,
To make him proof againſt the burning ray,
His temples with celeſtial ointment wet. Addiſ.

PROO'FLESS. adj. [from proof.] Unproved; wanting evidence.

Some were ſo manifeſtly weak and prooffleſs, that he muſt be a very courteous adverſary, that can grant them. Boyle.

1. To ſupport by placing ſomething under or againſt.

What we by day
Lop overgrown, or prop or bind,
One night derides. Milton.

2. To ſupport, by ſtanding under or againſt.

Like theſe earth unſupported keeps its place,
Though no fixt bottom props the weighty maſs.
Creech.

Eternal ſnows the growing maſs ſupply,
'Till the bright mountains prop th' incumbent ſky;
As Atlas fix'd each hoary pile appears. Pope.

3. To ſuſtain; to ſupport.

The nearer I find myſelf verging to that period, which is to be labour and ſorrow, the more I prop myſelf upon thoſe few ſupports that are left me. Pope.

PROP. n. ſ. [proppe, Dutch.] A ſupport; a ſtay; that on which any thing reſts.

The boy was the very ſtaff of my age, my very prop. Shakeſpeare.

You take my houſe, when you do take the prop
That doth ſuſtain my houſe; you take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live.
Shakeſpeare.

Some plants creep along the ground, or wind about other trees or props, and cannot ſupport themſelves. Bacon.

That he might on many props repoſe,
He ſtrengths his own, and who his part did take.
Daniel.

Again, if by the body's prop we ſtand,
If on the body's life, her life depend,
As Meleager's on the fatal brand,
The body's good ſhe only would intend. Davies.

Faireſt unſupported flower
From her beſt prop ſo far. Milton.

The current of his victories found no ſtop,
Till Cromwell came, his party's chiefeſt prop. Wall.

'Twas a conſiderable time before the great fragments that fell reſted in a firm poſture; for the props and ſtays, whereby they leaned one upon another, often failed. Burnet.

The props return
Into thy houſe, that bore the burden'd vines. Dryd.

Had it been poſſible to find out any real and firm foundation for Arianiſm to reſt upon, it would never have been left to ſtand upon artificial props, or to ſubſiſt by ſubtlety and management. Waterland.

PRO'PAGABLE. adj. [from propagate.] Such as may be ſpread; ſuch as may be continued by ſucceſſion.

Such creatures as are produced each by its peculiar ſeed, conſtitute a diſtinct propagable ſort of creatures. Boyle.

To PRO'PAGATE. v. a. [propago, Lat.]

1. To continue or ſpread by generation or ſucceſſive production.

All that I eat, or drink, or ſhall beget,
Is propagated curſe! Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Is it an elder brother's duty ſo
To propagate his family and name;
You would not have yours die and buried with you? Otway.

From hills and dales the cheerful cries rebound;
For echo hunts along, and propagates the ſound. Dry.

2. To extend; to widen.

I have upon a high and pleaſant hill
Feign'd fortune to be thron'd: the baſe o' th' mount
Is rank'd with all deſerts, all kind of natures,
That labour on the boſom of this ſphere
To propagate their ſtates. Shakeſp. Timon.

3. To carry on from place to place; to promote

Some have thought the propagating of religion by arms not only lawful, but meritorious. Decay of P.

Who are thoſe that truth muſt propagate,
Within the confines of my father's ſtate Dryden.

Thoſe who ſeek truth only, and deſire to propagate nothing elſe, freely expoſe their principles to the teſt. Locke.

Becauſe denſe bodies conſerve their heat a long time, and the denſeſt bodies conſerve their heat the longeſt, the vibrations of their parts are of a laſting nature; and therefore may be propagated along ſolid fibres of uniform denſe matter to a great diſtance, for conveying into the brain the impreſſions made upon all the organs of ſenſe. Newt.

4. To encreaſe; to promote.

Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breaſt,
Which thou wilt propagate, to have them preſt
With more of thine. Shakeſpear.

Sooth'd with his future fame,
And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden

5. To generate.

Superſtitious notions, propagated in fancy, are hardly ever totally eradicated Clariſſa

To PRO'PAGATE. v. n. To have offſpring.

No need that thou
Should'ſt propagate, already infinite,
And through all numbers abſolute, though one.
Milton.

PROPAGA'TION. n. ſ. [propagatio, Lat. propagation, Fr. from propagate.] Continuance or diffuſion by generation or ſucceſſive production.

Men have ſouls rather by creation than propagation. Hooker.

There are other ſecondary ways of the propagation of it, as lying in the ſame bed. Wiſeman.

There is not in all nature any ſpontaneous generation, but all come by propagation, wherein chance hath not the leaſt part. Ray on Creation.

Old ſtakes of olive trees in plants revive;
But nobler vines by propagation thrive. Dryden.

PROPAGA'TOR. n. ſ. [from propagate.]

1. One who continues by ſucceſſive production.

2. A ſpreader; a promoter.

Socrates, the greateſt propagator of morality, and a martyr for the unity of the Godhead, was ſo famous for this talent, that he gained the name of the Drole. Addiſon.

To PROPE'L. v. a. [propello, Lat.] To drive forward.

Avicen witneſſes the blood to be frothy that is propelled out of a vein of the breaſt. Harvey.

This motion, in ſome human creatures, may be weak in reſpect to the viſcidity of what is taken, ſo as not to be able to propel it. Arbuthnot on Alim.

That overplus of motion would be too feeble and languid to propel ſo vaſt and ponderous a body, with that prodigious velocity. Bentley's Sermons.

To PROPE'ND. v. n. [propendeo, Lat. to hang forwards.] To incline to any part; to be diſpoſed in favour of any thing.

My ſprightly brethren, I propend to you,
In reſolution to keep Helen ſtill. Shakeſpeare.

PROPE'NDENCY. n. ſ. [from propend.]

1. Inclination or tendency of deſire to any thing.

2. [From propendo, Lat. to weigh.] Conſideration; attentive deliberation; perpendency.

An act above the animal actings, which are tranſient, and admit not of that attention, and propendancy of actions. Hale.

PROPE'NSE. adj. [propenſus, Lat.] Inclined; diſpoſed. It is uſed both of good or bad.

Women, propenſe and inclinable to holineſs, be edified in good things, rather than carried away as captives. Hooker.

I have brought ſcandal
In feeble hearts, propenſe enough before
To waver, or fall off, and join with idols. Milton.

PROPE'NSION. } n. ſ. [propenſion, Fr. propenſio,
PROPE'NSITY. } Lat. from propenſe.]

1. Moral inclination; diſpoſition to any thing good and bad.

Some miſcarriages might eſcape, rather through neceſſities of ſtate, than any propenſity of myſelf to injurioufneſs. King Charles.

So forcible are our propenſions to mutiny, that we equally take occaſions from benefits or injuries. Government of the Tongue.

Let there be but propenſity, and bent of will to religion, and there will be ſedulity and indefatigable induſtry. South.

It requires a critical nicety to find out the genius or the propenſions of a child. L'Eſtrange.

The natural propenſion, and the inevitable occaſions of complaint, accidents of fortune. Temple.

He aſſiſts us with a meaſure of grace, ſufficient to overbalance the corrupt propenſity of the will. Rogers.

2. Natural tendency.

Bodies, that of themſelves have no propenſions to any determinate place, do nevertheleſs move conſtantly and perpetually one way. Digby.

This great attrition muſt produce a great propenſity to the putrefcent alkaline condition of the fluids. Arbuthnot.

PRO'PER. adj. [propre, Fr. proprius, Lat.]

1. Peculiar; not belonging to more; not common.

As for the virtues that belong unto moral righteouſneſs and honeſty of life, we do not mention them, becauſe they are not proper unto chriſtian men as they are chriſtians, but do concern them as they are men. Hooker.

Men of learning hold it for a ſlip of judgment, when offer is made to demonſtrate that as proper to one thing, which reaſon findeth common unto many. Hooker.

No

No ſenſe the precious joys conceives,
Which in her private contemplations be;
For then the raviſh'd ſpirit the ſenſes leaves,
Hath her own pow'rs, and proper actions free. Dav.

Of nought no creature ever formed ought,
For that is proper to th' Almighty's hand. Davies.

Dufreſnoy's rules, concerning the poſture of the figures, are almoſt wholly proper to painting, and admit not any compariſon with poetry. Dryden.

Outward objects, that are extrinſecal to the mind, and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinſecal and proper to itſelf, which become alſo objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.

They profeſſed themſelves ſervants of Jehovah their God, in a relation and reſpect peculiar and proper to themſelves. Nelſon.

2. Noting an individual.

A proper name may become common, when given to ſeveral beings of the ſame kind; as Cæſar. Watts.

3. One's own. It is joined with any of the poſſeſſives: as, my proper, their proper.

The bloody book of law
You ſhall yourſelf read in the bitter letter,
After your own ſenſe; yea, though our proper ſon
Stood in your action. Shakeſp. Othello.

Court the age
With ſomewhat of your proper rage. Waller.

If we might determine it, our proper conceptions would be all voted axioms. Glanville's Sceptis.

2. Place which affords an extended view.

Him God beholding from his prospect high,
Wherein past, present, future he beholds,
Thus spake. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Series of objects open to the eye.

There is a very noble prospect from this place: on the one side lies a vast extent of seas, that runs abroad further than the eye can reach: just opposite stands the green promontory of Surentum, and on the other side the whole circuit of the bay of Naples. Addison.

4. Object of view.

Man to himself
Is a large prospect, rais'd above the level
Of his low creeping thoughts. Denham.

Present, sad prospect! can he ought descry,
By what affects his melancholy eye;
The beauties of the ancient fabrick lost
In chains of craggy hills, or lengths of dreary coast? Prior.

5. View delineated; a picturesque representation of a landscape.

Claude Lorrain, on the contrary, was convinced, that taking nature as he found it seldom produced beauty; his pictures are a composition of the various draughts which he has previously made from various beautiful scenes and prospects. Reynolds.

6. View into futurity: opposed to retrospect.

To be king,
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Shakes. Macbeth.

To him who hath a prospect of the different state of perfect happiness or misery, that attends all men after this life, the measures of good and evil are mightily changed. Locke.

If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inference is right; let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we shall die. Locke.

Against himself his gratitude maintain'd,
By favours past, not future prospects gain'd. Smith.

7. Regard to something future.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to, or provision for the remaining part of his life? Tillotson.
